

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

25	Mar. 2	Supply (On going into Committee):—"That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair."—Amendment proposed, to leave out from the word "That" to the end of the Question, in order to add the words "the object of the Declaration of Paris respecting Maritime Law, signed at Paris on the 16th of April 1856, was, as was expressed in the preamble, to endeavour to attain uniformity of doctrine and practice in respect to Maritime Law in time of war: That it is moreover obvious that the whole value that might be supposed to attach to any such Declaration, as changing the ancient and immemorial practice of the law of nations on the subject, must necessarily depend on the general assent of all the Maritime States to the new doctrines: That the fact of important Maritime Powers, such as Spain and the United States, having declined to accede to the Declaration of Paris, deprives that document of any value as between the Governments who have signed it: That the consequence of some Powers adhering to the new rules, whilst others retained intact their natural rights in time of war, would be to place the former at a great and obvious disadvantage in the event of hostilities with the latter: That Great Britain being an essentially Naval Power, this House cannot contemplate such an anomalous and unsatisfactory condition of international obligations without grave misgivings: That, independently of all other considerations, the failure, after twenty years negotiations, to bring about general adhesion to its terms, necessitates the withdrawal of this Country from what was necessarily and on the face of it a conditional and provisional assent to the new rules: That this House, whilst desiring to leave the question of opportuneness to the discretion of Her Majesty's Government, and having confidence in the repeated declarations on the subject of individual members of the present Administration, think it desirable to record an opinion that no unnecessary delay ought to take place in withdrawing from the Declaration signed at Paris on 16th of April 1856, on the subject of Maritime Belligerent Rights,—(Mr. Percy Wyndham.)—instead thereof.—Question proposed, "That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question:"—Debate arising; "That the Debate be now adjourned:"—(Mr. Butler-Johnstone.)	53	184	238	-	-	A. ## Elementary Education Act:

"That in the opinion of this House, the provisions of the Elementary Education Act are defective, and its working unsatisfactory; and particularly that it fails to secure the general election of School Boards in towns and rural districts; that it does not render obligatory the attendance of children at school; that it deals in a partial and irregular manner with the remission and payment of school fees by School Boards; that it allows School Boards to pay fees out of rates levied upon the community, to denominational schools, over which the rate-payers have no control; that it permits School Boards to use the money of the ratepayers for the purpose of imparting dogmatic religious instruction in schools established by School Boards; that by the concession of these permissive powers it provokes religious discord throughout the country, and by the exercise of them it violates the rights of conscience" ( Mr. Dixon ):—Amendment proposed, to leave out from the word "House" to the end of the question, in order to add the words "the time which has elapsed since the passing of the Elementary Education Act of 1870, and the progress which has been made in the arrangements under it, are not such as to enable this House to enter with advantage upon a review of its provisions"—( Mr. William Edward Forster ),—instead thereof.—Question put, "That those words proposed to be left out stand part of the question" - - - - -	94	355	Mar. 5, 1872	61

Irish Railways (Purchase by the State) [1873]:

"That this House, whilst expressing no opinion on the subject of State ownership or State management of railways in other parts of the Empire, is of opinion that it is desirable (having regard to the universally expressed wishes and wants of the Irish people), that the railways in Ireland should be acquired on equitable terms by the State, with a view to their management being conducted in the interests of the public; this measure to be carried out in such a way as not to involve any loss to the finances of the Empire" ( Lord Claud Hamilton ) - - - - -	65	197	April 29, 1873	103

Local Taxation [1871] :
" That, inasmuch as many of the existing and contemplated charges on the local rates are for national purposes, and that it is neither just nor politic that such charges should be levied exclusively from one description of property (viz., houses and land), this House is of opinion that it is the duty of the Government to inquire forthwith into the incidence of Imperial as well as local taxation, and take such steps as shall ensure that every description of property shall equitably contribute to all national burdens" ( Sir Massey Lopes ).—Whereupon previous question put, " That that question be now put" ( Mr. Goschen ) - - - - -	195	241	Feb. 28, 1871	21

Note.—The Populations of Counties and Divisions of Counties, taken from the Census of 1871, are exclusive of Parliamentary Burghs and Shipping. The Numbers of Electors entered under “1868” and “1877” are taken from the Registers made up in these years for 1868–69 and 1877–78 respectively. Besides the County and Burgh constituencies to which this Return applies, there are two others, comprising the four Scotch Universities, which return one Member each to Parliament, making, with the 32 County and 98 Burgh Members entered in the Return, a total of 60 Scotch Members.

ENGLAND.

Date of Casualty.	Place of Casualty.	No. of Lives Lost.	Cause of Casualty.	Finding of the Coroners' Juries.
2 Jan. 1875	Pendleton . . . . .	1	Boiler explosion .	Accidental death.
6 Jan. "	North Shields . . . . .	7	- - ditto . .	Killed by explosion of a boiler, and that such explosion was caused by the overheating of the said boiler. That the boiler was too old and too much weakened by frequent repairs to be worked with safety, without greater care than appears to have been exercised by the engine-man.
21 Jan. "	Todmorden, Yorkshire . .	7	- - ditto . .	That John Hiley, William Livsey, Thomas Crowther, Thomas Greenwood, Smith Hodgson, Richard Clegg, and James Sutcliffe, came to their deaths from injuries received by reason of the accidental explosion of a steam boiler at the works of Messrs. Lord Brothers, Todmorden. That the explosion was, in the opinion of the jurors, caused by the extensive corrosion and grooving of the plates of the boiler, and that there was an error of judgment on the part of Edmund Woodhead, the engineer in charge, which led him to believe, and to report to Messrs. Lord Brothers, that the boiler which exploded was safe and in working order; and the jurors recommend that there should be Government inspection of all steam boilers.
5 Mar. "	Harris's Brick-yard, Silverdale, Staffordshire.	1	- - ditto . .	Accidental death: an insured boiler.
14 Mar. "	Salby . . . . .	1	- - ditto . .	That Thomas Reid, master of the screw steamer "Ilala," was accidentally scalded on the 14th March by the explosion of a steam boiler in his vessel.

1 July "	On the high seas near to the "Kentish Knock" Lightship, on board the ship "Renown" of Newcastle.	3	- - ditto . .	Killed by an explosion of the boilers, but how the explosion occurred there is not sufficient evidence to show.
17 July "	Wolverhampton . . . . .	1	- - ditto . .	Died from accidental injuries caused by explosion of a boiler.
28 July "	Pearson and Knowles' Collieries, Arley Pits, Ince-in-Makerfield.	2	- - ditto . .	Explosion of underground boiler from defective plate, corroded apparently by the action of water, but no one found directly chargeable with neglect in the matter of such corrosion and defect.
31 July "	Messrs. Mosley & Co.'s India Rubber Works, Tipping-street, Ardwick.	1	- - ditto . .	Accidental death. Notes. —A fuel economiser attached to the boiler exploded.
13 Aug. "	Darlaston . . . . .	2	- - ditto . .	Accidental death through the explosion of a boiler.
18 Aug. "	Brook House Colliery, Bucknall	1	- - ditto . .	Accidental death; explosion caused by corrosion of plates of boiler.
7 Sept. "	Paper mills at Penny Bridge Furnace, near Greenod, Ulverston, in the county of Lancaster.	6	- - ditto . .	That on the 7th day of September in the year aforesaid at Penny Bridge Furnace, within the liberty and county aforesaid, a certain boiler used at the said works for boiling rags, accidentally and by misfortune exploded, whereby two persons were instantly killed, and the remaining four received mortal injuries and scalds, from the effects of which they shortly afterwards died.

Date of Casualty.	Place of Casualty.	No. of Lives Lost.	Cause of Casualty.	Finding of the Coroners' Juries.
13 Nov. 1875	River Tyne . . . .	1	Boiler explosion .	Killed by the bursting of a tube in the boiler of a steam tug boat. (Name of tug, the "Messenger," of North Shields.)
26 Nov. "	Blackburn . . . .	2	- - ditto . .	Accidental death from scalding.
17 Dec. "	Messrs. Mosley & Co's India Rubber Works, Tipping-street, Ardwick.	2	- - ditto . .	Accidental death.

That the said John Dowers, aged 26 years, engineer, came to his death by the explosion of a boiler on board the "Lady Derby" steam ship, through the general thinness of the boiler, caused by corrosion and neglect; and the jurors are of opinion that the owners and managers are at least censurable, if not legally blameable, for such explosion.
22 Jan. 1876	Reddiah . . . .	1	- - ditto . .	Accidental death.
	River Medway, parish of Malling, Kent.	1	- - ditto . .	That John Streten, engine driver of the steam tug "Prince of Wales," belonging to Mr. Samuel William Shaw, of Rochester, coal factor, did, on the 9th February in the year aforesaid, in the parish of Malling, in the county aforesaid, accidentally come by his death by the explosion of the boiler of the said steam tug, on the River Medway on that day; that the explosion resulted from the said John Streten, the deceased, working the boiler aforesaid at a higher pressure than he was authorised by his instructions to work at; and the jurors were of opinion that the boiler was undoubtedly weak in the stays, as elicited by the scientific evidence, and they recommend all users of steam power to have their boilers periodically tested.
9 Feb. "	River Medway, near New Hythe	1	- - ditto . .	Killed by the bursting of a defective boiler on board the steam tug "Prince of Wales."
8 Mar. "	Bradley, near Bilston . .	4	- - ditto . .	That the deceased persons lost their lives in consequence of an explosion of a boiler at Messrs. East's works, and that such explosion was caused by the injudicious placing of a plate of iron inside the boiler, and allowing it to remain in a position that was liable to prevent the proper escape of steam from the safety valve.
29 Mar. "	Smethwick . . . .	3	- - ditto . .	Manslaughter against Joseph Stones; result of injuries received by the explosion of a boiler belonging to him.
5 April "	Salford . . . .	1	- - ditto . .	Accidental death.

8 April "	Featherstall Mill, Hollins-road, Oldham.	1	- - ditto . .	Killed by the collapse of a flue in movable engine on wheels, used for winding materials and grinding mortar at said mill in course of erection, owing to said flue having been improperly stayed. The jury recommended Government inspection of similar engines. N.B. —The flue which collapsed was oval in shape, and had originally been stayed by a tube through boiler, but owing to leakage the stay was removed during repairs.
7 May "	Widnes Local Board Waterworks, Ditton, Stockswell.	1	- - ditto . .	Explosion of steam boiler at water works from collapsing of flue in same, owing to some unusual pressure of steam; but how such pressure arose is not shown.
9 May "	Gallon & Co's Paper Mills, Felling Shore, Gateshead-on-Tyne.	5	- - ditto . .	Died from injuries sustained by accidental explosion of a steam boiler at Gallon & Co's paper mills, Felling Shore.
19 June "	Bulwell, Nottingham . .	1	- - ditto . .	Accidentally scalded. (In this case the boiler was a Cornish boiler, having a flue running through it. It was an old boiler; through corrosion a part of the flue had become thin and weak.) Note by Coroner. —It appears to have been worked at a higher pressure than was consistent with safety.
14 July "	H.M.S. "Thunderer," Spithead	45	- - ditto . .	From injuries casually, accidentally, and by misfortune, received by the explosion of the starboard forward boiler of the after stoke-hold.
26 July "	Twentywell Norton, Derbyshire	2	- - ditto . .	Accidentally killed by explosion of boiler of steam engine.
23 Aug. "	Oil Mill, Bankside, Sculcoates, Hull.	5	- - ditto . .	Injuries received by the explosion of a steam boiler, which was unfit to bear the pressure of steam to which it was subjected. Note by Coroner. —The boiler was thoroughly worn out.

BROOKLYN THEATRE.

THE INQUEST.

STATEMENT of Thomas B. Jackson, Architect.

IN the early spring of 1871 I was called on by Messrs. Keeney and McCue in relation to building a theatre in Brooklyn, and an appointment made for me to view the site and meet Mrs. Conway, the lessee, for whom it was to be erected, and on doing so, and obtaining her views as to size of stage, number of audience and such other matters as she wished carried out, prepared the plans. The main building, located on the corner of Johnson-street and Floods-alley, was 70 feet wide and 127 feet long, with an L entrance from Washington-street, and had a stage 50 feet deep and an auditorium containing a parquet with 250 chairs, and balcony with 400 seats; on the ground floor a dress circle, on the second floor or first gallery with 400 seats, and a family circle or gallery above with 350 seats. A cellar extended underneath the entire building, and the green room and dressing rooms for the actors were underneath the stage and parquet with windows and doors opening into the area-way on Johnson-street. The entrance to the auditorium was on Washington-street 20 feet wide with a lobby on the first floor 16 feet wide, from which two doors opened to the balcony and parquet, and a staircase about 10 feet wide at the bottom, and 7 feet 6 inches wide at the top extended to the dress-circle lobby; a separate entrance and a staircase 6 feet 8 inches wide led to the top gallery adjoining the main entrance on Washington-street, but not connected with it. The ticket and treasurer's office was underneath the gallery stairs. There was a private entrance to the upper floors of the Washington-street building which connected with the treasurer's office and a passageway underneath the parquet connecting with the stage; a window in the office commanded a view of the house and the stage. The stage entrance and scene doors were on Johnson-street, and a door from the green room under the stage opened into the areaway. There were also exit or escape doors from the parquet and dress circle to Floods-alley, and a door from the gallery stairs into the dress circle. The plans were submitted, and after a careful examination were approved, and it was decided to go on with the work and get the building completed ready for opening by the 1st of October. On my recommendation it was decided to erect the building by day's work, Messrs. Kingsley and Keeney furnishing all the materials, and Mr. Keeney personally supervising the work, he being a practical builder. The cellar walls were 2 feet 4 inches thick, built of the best building stone, laid in cement on a course of cement concrete, 4 feet wide and 1 foot thick. The brick walls were built of the best hard-burnt brick, 16 inches thick, with piers 20 inches thick and 4 feet wide under the roof trusses, and all laid in the best of mortar, and the joints grouted. The piers supporting the galleries were of brick 2 feet square, with stone borders and caps, and grouted solid in cement. There was a scene pit sunk underneath the stage, with stone walls 2 feet thick. The stage floor girders were 12 x 14, the centre floor beams 4 x 14 inches, and the side floor beams 2 x 12 inches. The parquet and balcony floor beams were 3 x 10 inches, averaging 16 inches from centres, and supported by girders 10 x 10 inches inches resting on the brick piers in the cellar. The floor beams of the lobbies and vestibule were  $3 \times 12$  inches, 16 inches from centres. The galleries were supported by girders made up of 7-8ths inch thicknesses of white pine 12 inches wide, with lapped joints strongly nailed together with 12-penny nails, forming one continuous piece  $12 \times 12$  inches wide. The front girders were supported by 5-inch and the back ones by 7-inch locust-posts, with iron cap and base plates. The floor beams of the galleries were  $3 \times 12$  inches, 12 inches from centres on the front girders, and notched on with level bearings. The centre two posts of the top gallery rested on the 12-inch brick lobby wall, and the gallery was additionally strengthened by the partition at the back of the dress circle formed with  $4 \times 6$ -inch joist. The galleries were put up before the walls were built, and when the walls were carried up all the timbers were built in solid. The roof was a double pitched roof, and covered with tin. All the timbers throughout were of the best quality of yellow and white pine, free from all defects, well framed, bolted, and anchored, and all the floor beams bridged. The floors were laid with white or Georgia pine plank, prepared with platforms for the seats. The walls were plastered, and the ceilings boarded, canvassed, and fresco painted. The stairs to the dress circle and gallery were supported on strong timber carriages and bracketed. The proscenium had four private boxes and an elaborate arch and decorations. The auditorium was lighted by a prismatic reflecting sunlight in the main dome, by ceiling lights in the parquet and dress circle, and by wall brackets in the gallery. The stage was fitted up with a full complement of scenery and machinery. As protection against fire there was placed on the stage near the entrance a  $2\frac{1}{2}$ -inch fire hydrant and 50-feet of hose with pipe, which could throw water over the roof, and in the north-west corner a 1-inch water pipe was carried up to the carpenter's or fly gallery, with screw nozzle cocks on each floor. All the auditorium lights and the border lights over the stage were lighted by electricity, and all lights were protected by wire screens. The entire building was heated by a low-pressure steam boiler placed underneath the entrance lobby, and the steam pipes from the boiler were connected with the coils and radiators. All the materials of every kind were of the very best quality and all the different works done in the best manner, under my own personal supervision of several hours on the premises every day when work was going on. To the above general description of the building it seems to me eminently proper to supplement a few remarks as to the matter of egress. Having had many years' experience in the construction of large buildings, the first being Trinity Church, New York, when learning my profession, my attention was early called to the proportioning of halls, corridors, lobbies, staircases and general exits for large assemblages of people, and after studying and timing the movement or progression of people as they passed along the streets from ferry boats, public buildings of all kinds, and wherever else occasion offered, I finally arrived at what I consider a safe basis, viz., to allow 15 inches width of exit for every 100 seats in a house; that is to say, 12 $\frac{1}{2}$  feet for 1,000, 25 feet for 2,000, 37 $\frac{1}{2}$  feet for 3,000, and 50 feet for 4,000, and with such exit any two gallery house can be emptied in five minutes provided all the passages, lobbies, and staircases are proportioned to the same. The main exit from the Brooklyn Theatre was in excess of that figure and could discharge 1,450 persons in three minutes, the gallery stairs could discharge 350 persons in two minutes, and two minutes for their movement in the gallery and on the stairs, which is a very ample allowance, and in four minutes the gallery could be emptied; it was the same with the rest of the house; there was no crush or jam anywhere, the different exits were all proportioned and every one moved out quickly and freely. On the opening night when the house was full, it was emptied inside of five minutes; that is the only occasion I have timed it, but I have no doubt many frequenters can testify to a similar fact; five minutes is a reasonable time to get 1,450 persons out of a theatre, and four minutes is a reasonable time to get 300 persons out of a gallery 51 steps above the street. And now having carefully revised my plans and figures in the face of this great calamity, I repeat what I have always heretofore said, that it (the Brooklyn Theatre) was one of the best constructed and best arranged theatres in the country. One word more about the gallery stairs not being straight, as some persons erroneously suppose they ought to have been. Captain Eyre M. Shaw, a military officer, and chief of the London Fire Brigade, referring to staircases in his pamphlet on theatres, says:

“ Stairs

"Stairs with bends at a right or even an acute angle are much safer than straight stairs." And again, "In some buildings, too, it may be possible to construct the stairs with angles in alternate directions, first right and then left, and thus, to a certain extent, combine uniformity of movement with absence of pressure." As the gallery stairs were built exactly in that manner I trust that my experience, sustained by such an opinion, will be sufficient to convince all unprejudiced persons of their proper construction. In conclusion, I have only to add that no pains or expense were spared on the part of the owners to make the building entirely safe and convenient, and all suggestions for improvements made by me were readily met on their part, and consequently the cost was much above the outlay originally intended.

Mr. Jackson then unfolded his plans, and proceeded to reply to queries of the Coroner and jurymen: There was a space of 12 feet between the ceiling of the theatre and the roof; I was not in the theatre for four years previous to its destruction: I don't know whether any alterations were made in it; I have described the building as I erected it.

The jurymen examined the plans, which were explained in all their details by Mr. Jackson, who answered the various questions put to him with great readiness. He said he had built other theatres and had never had between the stage and the auditorium a brick wall; there was one in the Academy of Music in Brooklyn and one in the Academy in New York; the Brooklyn Theatre was ventilated better than any other theatre he ever knew: his theory was that the draught drew the flame from the proscenium into the body of the house. He did not think there would be any advantage in having a door lined with sheet iron let down from the proscenium, as it would take too long to work it in case of fire. It would be better to use the hose and hydrant. Fires in theatres were sudden, and it would take too much time to lower the door. He believed that instead of the green curtain used generally in the theatres, there might be a curtain saturated with some chemical preparation to prevent it taking fire. This could be lowered in case of fire, and the people could get out unhurt. In reply to a question of Mr. McLean, the witness said that the Brooklyn Theatre was not such a theatre as he would build, if he were asked to build one perfectly safe.

Q. How would you build it? A. I should divide it into three parts—the stage, the auditorium, and the lobby and staircase.

Q. In what way? A. With brick walls.

Q. Then there would be, of course, a proscenium wall? A. Yes, sir; I would have the stage one part and the auditorium another part, the lobbies and staircases another part; in addition to that I would have the scenery distinct from the stage, and I would allow no scenery on the stage except what they wanted to use for one night's performance; all the rest should be placed in a scene-room isolated and shut off by iron doors, so no fire could take place; but who could afford to build such a building, and who could afford to hire it? I think the gallery egress of this theatre was ample; I don't think I could improve on that stairway; I don't know of any theatre which surpasses it in this respect; I consider it was a first class building in all respects; the ceiling was done in wood more with the view of safety than anything else, and it cost more and was much better than lath and plaster; all the walls were plastered.

THE VERDICT.

We, the undersigned jury, impaneled to inquire into the loss of life caused by the fire at the Brooklyn Theatre on the night of December 5, 1876, do find as follows:

That William Denche came to his death December 7, 1876, at No. 188, Nelson-street, Brooklyn, from burns and nervous shock received on the night of December 5, 1876, at the Brooklyn Theatre.

That John Cumberson came to his death, December 10, 1876, at the Long Island College Hospital, from exhaustion consequent upon burns received on the night of December 5, 1876, at the Brooklyn Theatre.

That the number of 281 additional came to their death by suffocation at the Brooklyn Theatre building on the night of December 5, 1876, and that the coffin containing fragments of bodies viewed by us tends to the belief that more perished.

And we also find :

That, on the 5th December 1876, at or about 11 o'clock and 15 minutes p.m., the employés of the Brooklyn Theatre discovered a fire in one of the stage flies ; that at this time there were seated in the said theatre about one thousand people, about 250 of whom were seated in the parquet and balcony, 350 of whom were seated in the dress circle, and about 400 of whom were seated in the gallery. That, for reasons hereafter stated the employés of the theatre were unable to extinguish the fire, and the audience made a rush from all parts of the house to the various places of exit, which consisted of two doors on Washington-street, one door on Flood's-alley, leading from the parquet, also one from the dress circle to Flood's-alley, near Johnson street. That nearly the entire audience seated in the parquet and dress circle escaped from the building. That a large portion of the audience seated in the gallery, among whom were the bodies upon whom this inquisition is taken, were overcome by the smoke and flame of the burning building, and thereby came to their death before they were able to escape from the gallery. That in about 30 minutes from the discovery of the fire the roof and a portion of the walls of the theatre had fallen, and it was impossible to rescue any persons therefrom.

That the said building, known as the Brooklyn Theatre, was constructed in a substantial manner, was admirably adapted for the purpose for which it was intended, so far as its modes of entrance were concerned, and also so far as its means of egress from parquet and dress circle. There would, in our judgment, have been greater security for the safety of the audience if there had been a brick wall extending from cellar to roof separating the stage from the auditorium, and hand rails on each side of the stairway leading from the gallery. That the Fire Department of the City of Brooklyn rendered prompt and most efficient services in the extinguishment and restriction of the said fire, and accomplished all that the unprecedented rapidity of the flames enabled them to do. That the police force of the First Precinct were promptly at the theatre and rendered effective service in assisting the audience from the parquet and dress circle, but attention to the gallery seems to have been almost entirely neglected. No orders were given by the officer in command for the force to distribute it so as to render assistance at all the exits, and as a result the efforts of the men were almost wholly directed to the main lobby and dress circle stairs. The rapid progress of smoke and flame justifies a doubt whether the proper distribution of the force in this case would have saved life in the gallery. But there is, in our judgment, no excuse for the officer in command on this occasion for neglecting to give such orders to his subordinates as would have afforded effective help to those in the gallery.

That the fire originated from one of the drop scenes coming in contact with the border light.

That the said fire gained headway and failed to be extinguished, because of

The inexcusable Neglect of the Management of the said theatre, which appears in these special details :—

First. That there was no responsible head of the employés.

Second. That there was no discipline among the employés.

Third. That the appliances for the extinguishment of fire upon the stage or in the flies were wholly inadequate.

Fourth. That the fire hose, formerly at hand, has not been kept in place or use.

Fifth. That the stage was overcrowded with scenery used in former plays, thereby rendering its condition extra hazardous, and adding to the volume of fire, if not directly the cause of it.

Sixth. That the difference shown in the neglect to recognise the danger from fire by providing proper appliances for extinguishment when warned by the occurrence of two fires, one on the stage, the other in the box office, but a week before the final destruction, constituted a violation of a most vital duty to the public who were mollified in confiding in the management for the utmost security in that regard.

That

That the business manager of the said theatre was Guilty of a culpable neglect in that the means of exit from the dress circle to Flood's-alley, near Johnson-street, was so effectually closed as to resist the efforts of several persons who attempted to force it.

That it is the special duty of managers of places to which the public are invited, to put forth every effort to secure their safety, and that the slightest degree of negligence becomes criminal when contributed by persons holding such relations to the public.

Recognising our grave responsibility as jurors on an inquest through which we have sought to discover the causes of the most disastrous calamity which ever befel our city, and having discovered them to fix the blame where it properly belongs, we feel that we would be wanting in the complete performance of our duty, if we did not warn the public to demand of the proper authorities such legislative action as would hereafter, under severe penalties, assure greater security to life in the construction of buildings intended as places of public amusement, and so far as in their power prevent the occurrence of any similar disaster.

Not being experts either on the building or management of places of amusement, we would be diffident in giving advice upon the subject, did the evidence before us not unanimously lead to the following

Conclusions :—

First. In the erection hereafter of any building intended for theatrical purposes, there should be a brick wall extending from cellar to roof, dividing the stage from the auditorium.

Second. There should be two fire hydrants on the stage, one on each side at some convenient place. There should be one in the fly gallery; there should be one in the front lobby, to each of which hydrants there should be attached a proper length of hose, frequent examination of which should be made so as to insure its being at all times ready for effective service.

Third. There should be employes of theatres whose sole duty should be to attend to these hose at all times when there was an audience in the building.

Fourth. As a third gallery is attended with more than ordinary danger, not less than two wide and commodious stairways should be provided as a means of exit from it.

Fifth. As scientific discovery and experiment have demonstrated, the possibility of rendering incombustible the material used for scenery, the use of any inflammable article for that purpose should be prohibited.

Sixth. There should be hand rails on each side of every stairway.

Seventh. There should be iron fenders at intervals of not more than 12 feet upon all the border lights, so that no portion of the scenery, whether through carelessness or accident, could come in contact with the wire which encloses the gaslights.

In witness whereof we, the said jurors, as well as the Coroner, have to this our verdict, set our hands and seals on the 31st January 1877.

REPORT of the SPECIAL COMMITTEE of the BOARD of ALDERMEN.

EXTRACT from the "Brooklyn Daily Eagle," 18th December 1876.

SUGGESTIONS.

The Aldermen on the Subject of Fire-proof Theatres.

THE CONCLUSIONS to which the Special Committee of the Board have been carried by their recent Investigations.

THE Special Committee of Fire, appointed by the Common Council, with power to associate with themselves two builders or architects for the purpose of examining public halls and places of amusement in this city, made their report to the board this afternoon. The report is of considerable length, and embodies in itself the results of the inspection of the theatres and principal halls, as reported in the "Eagle," at the time of the inspection. It also includes specific recommendations for each case as the defects of each structure were apparent to the committee. The report in full will appear in the proceedings of the board.

Appended to and forming the conclusion of the report is the following general recommendations of the committee.

CONCLUSIONS.

In conclusion, your committee desire to say that lessees and owners of the buildings visited expressed their desire and readiness to make such alterations or provide such additional safeguards against fire or accident as your committee suggested.

Your committee offer for the consideration of the board the following suggestions, which they deem important, and which should be incorporated in any law or ordinances to be framed for the greater security of audiences in all buildings used for public assemblage.

In all buildings provided with stage and scenery the owner should be required to make the following precautions against fire :—

to be built between the auditorium and the stage, and that the same should be carried up to the roof, and fire-brick wall built across the proscenium opening.

That an iron or wire drop-curtain should be provided at all places of amusement so as to effectually shut off fires occurring on the stage from communicating to the auditorium.

That all doors leading from the auditorium to the stage in theatres or halls should be of fire-proof material.

All places of amusement (halls and public buildings) should be provided with an adequate supply of fire-hose and hydrants placed in convenient locations therein.

All stairs to be provided with strong banisters, or balustrade and handrails; all doors to swing outward.

A fire alarm should be connected from the stage in theatres or halls to the nearest engine company or station-house.

That in all places of amusement or public halls not less than two competent men should be detailed to attend upon the means employed to extinguish fires, who should be compelled to give such appliances their exclusive attention during during the time such places are open and occupied for performances or entertainments.

Passage-ways to be kept Clear.

That the owners or lessees of all places of amusement, or owners, trustees, or corporations in charge of all buildings used for public assemblages, be restrained from using settees, camp-stools, chairs, or any other kind of seats in the aisles or passage-ways of such buildings at any time.

That in all cases the passage-ways in places of amusement between the outside rows of seats and the walls of the buildings should not be less than four feet in width to afford ample and easy means of egress.

What there is required are separate and distinct entrance-ways of an ample width for every part of the house in theatres and halls, so that collisions and jams in the passage-ways may be avoided.

That the existing habit of

Storing Inflammable Materials

On and under the stages in places of amusement should be discontinued, as in the judgment of your committee they offer additional risks for fires, and impede egress from the stages in case of fire.

Your committee have been unable to collect statistics respecting the loss by fire of theatres, &c., but enough is known to warrant your committee in stating that 99 out of every 100 theatres, or places of public amusement employing scenery have been burned from hazard inherent in the equipping or management of the stage.

The construction and occupancy of a theatre seem naturally to invite fire, and in almost every case the auditorium and the stage are practically one; unlike a warehouse, where brick partitions retard the progress of the flames. The theatre is one vast room, in which a fire, once started, makes sudden head-way, and has unbroken sweep for its progress: the scenery, the properties, the gas-lights, the use of fireworks in spectacular representations, and other means of a similar nature, all combine to increase the risk, as compared with edifices used for other purposes.

The highest talent and the greatest skill have been devoted to the discovery and application of means for the prevention of fires in theatres, and much has been done in that direction, but much more is needed.

REPORT of Chief Engineer Nevins.

At a regular meeting of the Board of Fire Commissioners of Brooklyn yesterday, the following interesting detailed report of Chief Engineer Thomas F. Nevins was received, and ordered to be printed:—

Headquarters Department of Fire and Buildings,
Office of Chief Engineer, 367, Jay-street, Brooklyn, 13 December 1876.

To the Board of Commissioners of Department of Fire and Buildings.

Gentlemen,

On Tuesday, 5th December 1876, at 20 minutes past 11 p.m., the city of Brooklyn was the scene of a most extensive and disastrous conflagration, accompanied by one of the most appalling and astounding calamities, of such a horrifying nature that it has thrown a pall of gloom and sadness over the entire community. The Brooklyn Theatre, a building that had been constructed, as was supposed, with ample facilities for the escape of the audience in case of a fire occurring during a performance, was entirely destroyed by fire, and terrible to state, nearly 300 persons lost their lives in their desperate efforts to escape from the burning building. The following is a detailed statement of the operations of the Fire Department, from the time of my receiving the alarm until the last body was known with certainty to lie beneath the ruins was recovered.

The Alarm.

I received the alarm at my residence at 20 minutes past 11 p.m., and was on the ground at 26 minutes past 11 p.m., on the way to the fire. I located its position, and directed my driver to send out a second and third alarm from the house of engine No. 5. The rear of the theatre on Johnson-street, and the side on Flood's-alley were all alight, and I saw at once that there was no possibility of saving any portion of the theatre, and at that time the station-house, Post Office, and office of the "Daily Argus," all on Washington-street, running through to Flood's-alley, were in great danger. District Engineer Farley, whose district the fire was in, had arrived early on the ground, and after making energetic efforts, and succeeding, as was then supposed, in clearing the lobby of the theatre of its occupants, had turned his attention to stopping the progress of the fire. Engine No. 5 was located at the corner of Johnson and Adams streets, stretching their hose past the rear, and took their streams immediately into the front of the building on Washington-street, and afterwards to the roof of Dieter's Hotel. Engine No. 6 had the hydrant at the junction of Fulton and Washington streets, and had their pipe in the front entrance, in charge of District Engineer Farley. They were afterwards taken to the top of the Post Office, in order to reach the fire in the cupola. Engine No. 7 took the hydrant at the corner of Johnson and Pearl streets, and rendered good service in preventing the fire from crossing to the other side of that street.

The second call companies, engines Nos. 4, 8, 10, and No. 2 truck, were promptly on hand, and located as follows: engine No. 4 at the hydrant corner of Fulton-street and Myrtle-avenue, taking their pipe to the roof of the Post Office, under direction of District Engineer Dale; engine No. 10 at the hydrant corner of Adams-street and Myrtle-avenue, taking their hose through Flood's-alley, immediately in the rear of the theatre, under direction of District Engineer Cunningham; engine No. 8, attached to the hydrant at the corner of Tillary and Adams-street, taking their line through the alley-way on Adams-street to the side of the theatre on Flood's-alley, under direction of District Engineer Burns. Trucks Nos. 2 and 3 were engaged in raising ladders to the top of Dieter's Hotel, from which place they succeeded in breaking a number of holes in the side wall of the theatre and in the wall supporting the cupola, thus enabling the pipemen to bring the full force of their streams on the fire. By this time the rear wall of the theatre on Johnson-street had given way, and the fire had communicated to two frame buildings immediately opposite the rear of the theatre.

The third alarm companies were by this time on hand, and promptly got to work. Engine No. 2 at the corner of Johnson and Washington streets, taking their pipe to the rear, aided in stopping the fire from crossing Johnson-street, and afterwards to the top of Dieter's Hotel. Engine No. 3, at the corner of Montague and Court streets; engine No. 9, at the corner of Pearl-street and Myrtle avenue, and engine No. 1 at the corner of Pierrepont and Fulton streets, each company taking their streams where ordered by their respective engineers. Truck No. 1, assisted in raising the necessary ladders to the roof of the Station-house and Post Office. The fire was at this time well under control, when word was brought to me that there was another fire on Myrtle-avenue; I dispatched Assistant Engineer Smith, with orders to send for engines Nos. 14 and 17 if necessary. He returned shortly afterwards and informed me that, with the assistance of District Engineer Cunningham, and engines Nos. 9 and 10, the fire had been entirely extinguished. A short time afterwards word was brought to me that an alarm of fire had been received at the house of engine No. 5, for Station 3. I immediately ordered Engineer Cunningham to take engine No. 9 and the large hose tender and proceed to that station, and also ordered truck No. 1 to the same locality. It is proper to state here that the striking apparatus of the City Hall bell being broken no alarm came from that source. The alarms for the fire at Myrtle-avenue and Station 3 were brought to me by Mr. Edward Kollmyer, the secretary of the department, who assisted me very materially by his exertions. At 1.30 a.m., District Engineer Cunningham returned and informed me that the alarm at Station 3 was a small affair, and the services of the department were not required, as the fire at the theatre was well under control. I then set about dismissing such of the engine companies whose services were no longer required.

The First Body.

At about 3 a.m. I entered the front entrance of the theatre on Washington-street, and found the body of a woman in an upright position, leaning against the rear wall of the theatre, the legs through the beams partially burnt off, and the arms and head frightfully disfigured; I formed an opinion at once that there was a large number of persons in the ruins, and upon consultation with Commissioner McLaughlin and Assistant Engineer Smith, I decided not to express my views, as, from the insecure state of the walls, and the fact that the fire was but partially under control, I feared, should my suspicions be confirmed, that the rush would be so great that the operations of our wornout force would be interfered with and the fire again get the upper hand, or that a further accident might occur by the falling of some portion of the walls. The body of the woman found was conveyed to the Morgue, and search suspended for the time being.

The various engine companies were then dismissed, as their services were not required, and four lines of water kept on the ruins, working from hydrants, with a detail of two men to each line. The truck companies were kept on duty, and District Engineers Cunningham, Farley, and Burns directed to change their uniforms and to be on hand at daylight, with a detail of two men from each company in their respective districts. As soon as daylight arrived, I made a thorough inspection of the walls to satisfy myself of the propriety of allowing persons to enter the ruins; there being no wind at the time, I concluded there would be no danger upon entering the front entrance and penetrating a few feet beyond the point where body of the woman had been found a short time previous.

I discovered what appeared to be a mass of rubbish, with here and there a leg and an arm partially burnt projecting therefrom. I immediately ordered truck companies Nos. 2 and 3 on duty, and proceeded to uncover the remains; but slow progress was made, as the bodies were much burned, and with but little exertion a body would be partially dismembered. In order to facilitate matters, I directed the front stoop to be cut open and a ladder placed therein, to furnish access to the cellar. I then entered the cellar, and was horrified to find that the whole heap of what I had thought to be rubbish, was a compact mass of human bodies, burned and twisted into the most distorted positions. The whole of the cellar under the lobby of the theatre was densely packed with the remains of those who, but a few hours previous, had been in full possession of life and vigour. Up to this time it had not been surmised that such a terrible calamity had fallen upon the City of Brooklyn, and I could hardly realise it myself. But the terrible truth was there.

At daylight, District Engineer Farley reported, with the men from his command, and commenced removing the bodies from the rubbish, and as the facilities for removing the bodies to the Morgue were inadequate, they were placed in the front cellar. Shortly after District Engineers Burns and Cunningham, with their respective commands arrived, and the work of getting out the bodies was proceeded with, and at 9 a.m. over 40 bodies had been taken out and placed in the front cellar. By this time news had spread, and the fact becoming known we were retarded in our exertions by not having the necessary means of removal. The undertakers of Brooklyn, to their great honour, came forward and placed waggons and boxes at our disposal. From this time the work went on unceasingly, relays of men from the various companies joining in the work; also bell-ringers Oats and Furey. At 10 a.m. Assistant Engineer Smith arrived from the Eastern District with a detail of two men from each company in that district, and relieved the men who had been working since daylight.

In consequence of the striking apparatus on the City Hall Tower being out of order, and no means existing of giving an engineer an alarm in case of another fire, I directed District Engineer Dale to remain at headquarters to take charge, in case a second fire should occur. At 2 p.m. District Engineer Frost reported, bringing another detail from the Eastern District, and relieving the previous one, the work of removing the remains being still continued.

During the day the Commissioners remained at the ruins, aiding and assisting in the terrible work.

His Honor Mayor Schroeder and Alderman French also came to the scene of the calamity and made some valuable suggestions. Up to dark upwards of 200 bodies had been recovered, a great many of which were so badly burned that they were beyond recognition, and it was uncertain as yet how many more remained beneath the ruins. It was therefore decided to continue the search during the night.

The Ghastly Calcium Glare.

Three calcium lights were ordered to light up the ruins, and work was continued until the entire cellar of the lobby was cleared out, and over 250 bodies recovered. At 20 minutes past 8 p.m., an alarm of fire was given for Station 14, which proved to be a small fire in Doughty-street, near Columbia.

The Actors' Bodies.

Upon returning to the ruins I found the work was suspended in order to furnish the men with supper, and upon their return decided to commence work in the interior of the theatre at the Flood's-alley side, in order to recover, if possible, the bodies of Messrs. Murdoch and Burroughs, the only two performers who were reported missing. A great deal of trouble and severe labour was had here, as the side wall of the building had fallen in immense masses over the spot where the remains were supposed to be. After a great deal of labour our exertions resulted by the finding of two small portions of a human body, which, from the place they were found, were supposed to be all that was left of the body of poor Murdoch. A short distance away was found the remains of Claude Burroughs, which were identified without doubt by his numerous friends who swarmed to the spot and recognised the body by the teeth and the remains of the costume which he wore at the performance.

It being at this time past midnight, and no further evidence existing that any more bodies were in the ruins the firemen were relieved from further duty, and a force of labourers employed to dig over the ruins in order to ascertain if there were other victims. The object was to relieve the firemen, as in case of another fire they would hardly be fit to cope with it. A number of men were employed and placed at work in the ruins, but no more bodies were found that night. The firemen were dismissed, and the ruins left in charge of Foreman Lahey, of engine No. 6, who reported the finding of three more bodies at eight o'clock on Thursday morning. During Thursday morning it became evident that if the weather should change and it became cold enough to freeze, much trouble would be had in removing the débris in order to be sure that no more bodies remained. Upon consultation with the Commissioners I decided to employ Mr. Martin, the house mover, to remove the rubbish and ascertain, without doubt, that no more bodies were beneath the ruins. Since that time gangs of men have been employed by him, and have turned over all articles of value to firemen detailed to receive them, who, in turn, have turned them over to the police.

Accompanying this report please find a diagram showing the buildings partially destroyed, and the position of each engine and truck company at the scene of the fire, and receipts of articles turned over to Police Department. In conclusion, it gives me the utmost pleasure to say that every member of the department, officers and privates alike, seemed to vie each with the other in doing their utmost to mitigate the horrors of the calamity, by recovering the bodies of the killed, and placing them in charge of their friends. Privates and engineers worked side by side in the solemn performance of their sad duties, and no credit should be given to one over another for the work performed in recovering the remains. All should share alike for this creditable but unpleasant duty. For the efficient aid rendered by the Police Department, I am indebted. The officers and men of that department rendered most exemplary service, considering the fact that the station-house of that precinct was at no time during the fire out of danger.

Respectfully submitted,

Thomas F. Nevins, Chief Engineer.

SPECIAL REPORT of the FIRE MARSHAL.

Department of Police and Excise of the City of Brooklyn,
Office of the Chief Clerk,
Brooklyn, 18 December 1876.

To the Honourable the Common Council :

Gentlemen,—

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith the Report of Fire Marshal Keady, on the burning of the Brooklyn Theatre, together with the evidence and the accompanying documents. I am instructed by the Commissioners to say, that in view of the gravity of the occasion which has called forth this report, they respectfully recommend the printing of one thousand copies thereof, together with the accompanying evidence, in pamphlet form.

The enclosed resolution is herewith submitted for consideration by your honourable Board.

Very respectfully,
E. B. Lansing, Chief Clerk.

To the Honourable the Board of Police and Excise :

Gentlemen,—

It is made my duty by law to report to you the cause, circumstances, and origin of the great fire in the Brooklyn Theatre on Tuesday night, the 5th inst. One section of the law on this subject reads as follows :—

§ 54. "It shall be the duty of said Fire Marshal to examine into the cause, circumstances, and origin of fires occurring in the city of Brooklyn, by which any building, vessel, vehicle, or any valuable personal property shall be accidentally or unlawfully burned, destroyed, lost, or damaged wholly or partially ; and to especially inquire and examine whether the fire was the result of carelessness or the act of an incendiary. The said Fire Marshal shall take testimony on oath of all persons supposed to be cognisant of any facts, or to have means of knowledge in relation to the matters herein required to be examined and inquired into, and cause the same to be reduced to writing, verified and transmitted to the Board, with his report in writing embodying his opinions and conclusions in relation to the matter investigated. The said Fire Marshal shall report, in writing, to the Board, to the District Attorney, to the New York Board of Fire Underwriters, to the owners of property or other persons interested in the subject-matter of investigation, any facts and circumstances which he may have ascertained by such inquiries and investigations, which shall, in his opinion, require attention from said Board, officers or persons ; and it shall be the duty of said Fire Marshal, whenever he shall be of opinion that there is evidence sufficient to charge any person with the crime of arson, to cause such person to be arrested and charged with such offence, and furnish the District Attorney with all the evidence of guilt, with the names of witnesses, and all the information obtained by him, including a copy of all pertinent and material testimony taken in the case ; and he shall specially report to the Board as often as it shall require, his proceedings and the progress made in all prosecutions for arson, and the result of all cases which are finally disposed of." Chapter 863, Title 11, Section 54, Laws of 1873.

The other sections of the law contain provisions to compel the attendance of witnesses to testify under oath, and other necessary particulars.

Acting under this authority, I have made a full and careful investigation of the " cause, circumstances, and origin " of the fire, and I now beg leave to report to you the result, as shown by the testimony of about 62 witnesses.

The Brooklyn Theatre was built by the Brooklyn Building Association in 1870 and 1871, and covered a plot of ground near the south-east corner of Johnson and Washington-streets in this city, 70 by 127 feet. The corner lot was occupied by a three-story brick building used as a restaurant by Mr. A. W. Dieter, and the theatre stood inside of this with the main entrance on Washington-street, and the stage front, or rear of the building, and stage entrance on Johnson-street. It was three stories high, built of brick, with brown stone trimmings, had a parquet and dress circle, family circle, or gallery, and was capable of holding about 1,600 people. The building was put up by day's work, under the personal supervision of Mr. Thomas R. Jackson, the architect, and Mr. Abner C. Keeney, one of the owners. It is claimed that

to make it a safe, commodious, and first-class theatre in all respects. When finished it was leased to Mrs. S. B. Conway, and she held it up to the time of her death, about two years ago. After that it was leased to Shook and Palmer, and they held it up to the time of the fire. On that night the play of the "Two Orphans" was being performed. The house was fairly filled, but was not crowded, especially in the lower part. The audience consisted in all of about 1,000 people. Of these 250 were in the parquet, first floor; 350 in the dress circle, second floor; and 405 regular admissions, with some free tickets, in the gallery, or family circle. The performance had progressed without interruption or accident up to the beginning of the last act. It was then a few minutes after 11 o'clock. Shortly after the curtain was raised, noise and confusion was heard behind the scenes, and in a few moments it was seen that one of the borders up in the scenery had taken fire from one of the border lights, back from the front of the stage. The attachés and employés of the theatre, instead of giving the alarm immediately to the police or fire department, undertook to put out the fire by knocking it down about the stage with a long pole. This had no effect except to make it worse, by setting fire to the canvass awning of the mimic house, over the actors on the stage. I can find by the stage hands to extinguish the fire, although there was an ample supply on the stage, through a two or a two-and-a-half inch pipe, put in at the time the theatre was erected.

When the sparks fell on the stage, and the fire could be no longer concealed from the people, the usual result in such cases was produced, confusion and alarm. The audience stood up to leave, and there was certainly no time to lose. The actors, however, thought differently, and stepping to the foot-lights, advised the audience to be quiet and sit down, that there was no danger. Miss Claxton says she did so, Mr. J. B. Studley says he did so, and both agree that the lamented Mr. Murdoch did the same thing. The result was that many of the people sat down again. This was only for a minute, however, but it was long enough to cost many of those in the theatre that evening their lives. No doubt the advice was well meant, and was intended, probably, to allay excitement and prevent a panic. It did not do either. If, when the fire was first discovered, the curtain had been lowered, and the audience had been told quietly to withdraw, it would undoubtedly have saved many valuable lives. I never could, and cannot now, see any excuse for advising an audience to delay or remain in a burning building. In theatres, churches, and other public places at once and the performance or ceremonies brought to a close on the slightest indication of fire. In this instance it is believed that all who were in the parquet on the lower floor were saved. They had but a short distance to go to the street, and the means of exit from this place was reasonably good. In the dress circle, or second floor, the people were not so fortunate, for while some witnesses testified that they all got out in safety, others are equally positive that they did not. Among the latter is officer G. A. Wessman, of the 10th Precinct, who was at the theatre that night in citizen's dress. He swears, "I went up in the dress circle, found a woman there and took her out. There must have been other persons there then, for I heard cries but could not see the people on account of the smoke. I know there must have been several persons in the dress circle who were overtaken by the fire." The means of exit from this part of the house house were, one large double door in the centre of the building, and a side door leading to Flood's-alley and Johnson-street, marked on the top in large letters

The Audience should be Dismissed

So far as I could learn, this last door was not much used, if used at all. One witness testified that he tried to get out that way, but could not get the door open. There was also an extra door built for just such an emergency as this, to be used in case of fire, on the west side of the dress circle leading out to the gallery stairs, only one flight from Washington-street. I cannot learn from any source that this door had been opened by anyone, and yet it was the shortest way to the street from that part of the dress circle. It would seem that on every floor the people first rushed for the main passage, and ignored all the smaller ones. The progress of the flames was so rapid, and the time for escape so short, that the people became bewildered and panic-stricken, and many did not know where they were going. They were indeed in a terrible panic. The greatest confusion and the most awful part of this dreadful calamity occurred on or about the gallery stairs.

The testimony of Mr. Rogers, the business manager of the theatre, shows that there were in that part of the house, the gallery, according to the number of tickets sold, 405 persons, or over. All agree that the gallery was unusually well filled. It was the popular part of the house on this occasion, by those who went there to see the performance. Generally of the theatre are the most restless. They were quick to detect the rumbling noise on the stage before the fire became known to the rest of the audience, and when the first spark fell from the scenes, they were on their feet in an instant, rushing to the door. Under the assurance from the actors that there was no danger, some took their seats again, but only for a moment; then all ran, panic-stricken, for the doors that led to the stairs, and this was the only means of exit from that part of the house. There were no doors hung there; it was simply an opening about six feet wide, with partitions on each side, against which the ends of the seats butted. Doors opening either way would have made matters worse. The younger members of the audience jumped from the tops of these partitions on the heads of the crowd struggling for egress in the passag below. Those who did reach the stairs crowded on the top of each other until it became impossible to move. Meantime the fire had reached the roof of the gallery, at this place quite close to the heads of the audience. Dense volumes of smoke rolled up from the stage. The lights went out, and in a few moments the struggling crowd became a heap of lifeless bodies.

Charles Vine,

now in the City Hospital suffering from his injuries, testified that the fire reached the gallery ceiling in less than four minutes from the time he first saw it on the stage. He raised a window on the east side of the building, over Flood's-alley, but saw no means of escape there, and the crowd being still struggling in the dense heat and smoke to get to the stairs, he jumped over the front of the gallery down to the dress-circle below, injuring himself severely. He seems to be positive that many never reached the stairs at all, but died from the heat in the gallery. He was probably the last man to leave there alive, and does not think the stairs fell, as some seem to think, until it was burned down. Now, a word

About this Gallery Stairs.

I saw it measured, and it is just six feet eight inches from base to base, at Washington-street. All agree that it was the same width all the way up to the gallery. Under ordinary circumstances it was a good stairs. It is in evidence that in five or six minutes after the performance. The trouble in this case arose from the fact that all the people in the gallery wanted to use the stairs at the same time, and blocked it up so that very few of them, comparatively speaking, were able to use it at all. This stairs did not get crowded from any other part of the house, because those in the parquet and dress-circle had no access to it, the single door from the dress-circle to the gallery stairs not being opened. It was crowded in two places, the largest crowd being heaped up in an angle on the platform, opposite the box-office. This was only one flight from the street, and the stairs was unobstructed all the way from that point down. It would have been better, in my judgment, had there been some other means of exit from that gallery, in addition to this single stairway, and I feel sure now that there would have been, if the architect had once suggested it to the owners of the building. This theatre was as

as any other place of public amusement in Brooklyn, and was decidedly better in this respect than some of the churches and public schools of the city. I think the precautions against fire at Brooklyn Theatre were greatly neglected by Shook and Palmer, the lessees. They had been warned only a short time ago by two other fires occurring in the building within a few weeks of each other, and yet, so far as I can learn, no additional precautions were taken for the prevention or extinguishment of fires. These two fires, one in the box office, and one on the stage, were looked upon apparently as of no consequence, although one of them was large enough to bring a whole audience to their feet. It is very strange, to say the least, that the lessees or their managers did not then take advantage of the fire hydrant put in the building when erected, and see that the hose was properly attached and in order. The testimony shows that.

Mrs. Conway always kept these Hose attached, in order to be ready at a moment's notice. I know, of my own knowledge, that she kept pails of water at convenient places in the flies ready for use, and that she was very strict about the use of fire in every part of the theatre. On the other hand, many of the employés of Messrs. Shook and Palmer testify that they were cautioned about the use of fire, but they never saw any hose attached to the hydrant or "fire plug," or any other means of putting out a fire on the stage should one occur, except two axes, which were fastened some place under the stage, labelled "not to be used except in case of fire." Mr. Palmer testifies that the lessees lost 20,000 dollars worth of scenery and stage property by the fire, upon which they had only 5,000 dollars insurance, which is still another reason why greater precaution should have been taken against fire.

The most significant Feature of this whole calamity is the rapidity with which the flames spread from the stage scenery to the gallery. What caused such a rapid spread of the flames in this case? I can only surmise from the testimony. The stage fixtures, scenery, and machinery were dry as tinder, as is always the case in theatres. Even Mr. Murdoch, who stood so bravely on the stage up to the last moment, and who may be supposed to have been reasonably familiar with the surroundings of the stage, did not have time to escape. The same may be said of Mr. Burroughs. If they could not cross the stage to the west side—there was a large double door on Johnson-street which would afford a means of exit—but it seems they could not reach this, so quickly did the fire spread. The ceiling of the theatre was constructed of thin boards, covered over with canvas, and in a moment the fire spread to this ceiling from the stage. The dome fell before the people had time to leave the dress-circle. There was through the building, caused, it is supposed, by the opening of the doors on Johnson-street. I am not positive that these doors were opened longer than a few moments. One of the employés says he saw a man open them, and made him shut them again. If they were opened, of course, this added greatly to the draught, and accounts for the rapid progress of the fire. There were windows in the cellar opening in the area on Johnson-street, which also increased the draught draught. This may explain why, in less than six minutes, the whole theatre became enveloped in one mass of flame.

Much has been said

About turning off the Gas.

I have taken the testimony of William Field, Inspector of the Brooklyn Gas Company on this point, and he says he turned off the gas about one or two o'clock in the morning. He also said that when the fire reached the meters, the lead coupling pipes melted, and thus cut off the gas from the gallery stairs. Others claim that the gas was turned off by an attaché of the theatre much earlier in the evening, and that this caused much confusion and loss of life in the gallery. I have no evidence that the gas was cut off before the fire cut it off.

Abner C. Keeney, sworn, says—I live at 175, Cumberland-street, Brooklyn. I am the treasurer of the Brooklyn Building Association, who owned and built the Brooklyn Theatre. The building was erected in the spring and summer of 1871, and cost about 200,000 dollars. Mr. Thomas R. Jackson, of Broadway, New York, was the architect. He built Wallack's, the Albany and Boston Theatres, and was recommended to us as the best architect for the construction of theatres in this country. The construction was under his exclusive control, assisted by myself, and was done entirely by day's work. The walls were 16 to 20 inches thick, resting on concrete foundations, carried up solid, "grouted" throughout. The cross walls and supporting columns were all capped and banded together with stone, so as to ensure as much strength as possible. The timber, yellow and white pine, was sawed at our own mill, the New York and Brooklyn Saw Mill, as ordered by the architect. It was all properly seasoned and dried. The building was erected to seat about 1,600 comfortably.

The means of Egress.—This subject was carefully discussed by the members of the association, in order to make the theatre as safe as it could possibly be made. With that view the theatre was built adjoining Flood's-alley, a small street running from Myrtle-avenue to Johnson-street, and three different means of exit, with large capacity and double doors, provided on that side of the building. These passages to Flood's-alley led from the vestibule opposite the main entrance, and from the parquet in the middle of the building, and also from the lower part of the parquet next the stage. Those passages were about six or seven feet wide. These were connected with the second gallery as well as with the first floor or parquet. The front was provided with a main entrance from Washington-street, leading to the parquet on the first floor, and also by a wide stairs to the dress circle on the second floor. Those stairs were about 12 feet wide, and led down into the main vestibule. There were two pairs of doors, one a four-door and one a two-door entrance, from this vestibule into the parquet. Besides this there was a separate and distinct means of egress from the gallery out to Washington-street. This gallery stairs was about 10 feet wide all the way up, and in no case could this passage become choked up, or interfered with, from any other part of the building. It was exclusively for the use of those going to or from the gallery. There was still another, a private entrance, to the apartments occupied by the stage manager, Mr. Thorpe, over the vestibule. The stage was provided with two sets of doors, one a large set opening on Johnson-street, and the other also opening on Johnson-street, nearer to Washington-street. There was a private passage from the stage entrance to the main entrance, under the stage and parquet. We estimate our loss on building and fixtures at about 120,000 dollars, insured for about 40,000 dollars.

Thomas R. Jackson, sworn, says—I live at Yonkers, New York, and am an architect of 30 years' experience. I was the architect for the Brooklyn Theatre. I have been architect for Wallack's Theatre, the new Academy of Music, New York, Tammany Hall, and several other theatres throughout the country. The Brooklyn Theatre was erected in 1871, and was about 70 by 121; had a parquet and balcony and two galleries. The foundation was a course of concrete, and the cellar walls were stone; the pillars were brick, with stone binders and caps; the main walls were of hard-burnt brick, 20 inches thick up to the flies, and above that 16 inches thick, with four-inch buttresses. There was one partition wall of brick, 12 inches, one story high; this lobby wall partly supported the gallery; that was the usual thickness for such a wall; those were the only walls. On the east side of the building, fronting on Flood's-alley, there were two windows at the flies, and I think two on each of the galleries. The main entrance from Washington-street to the parquet was about 20 feet wide; this was the vestibule; the lobby entrance to the parquet from the vestibule was 16 feet wide. There was one four-fold door eight feet wide, one two-fold door six feet wide, leading from the lobby into the parquet; there were also three doors from the parquet to Flood's-alley, a narrow street on the east side of the theatre. Those doors were about six feet wide, hung to swing outwards, and secured with bolts only, so that they could be opened easily from the inside in case of emergency. There was a stage-entrance door from Johnson-street, five feet wide, and also a large scene door, perhaps eight feet wide. The green-room was in the basement under the stage, and there was a door from the green-room out to the area way, and steps from that to the side-walk on Johnson-street, to be used in case of necessity. There was also a private passage-way from the stage underneath the parquet to the treasurer's office; there was also a private entrance from Washington-street to the apartments upstairs. The stairs to the dress circle were from the lobby of the parquet, and were about 10 feet wide; there was also a stairs from the dress circle leading out on Flood's-alley; this was all to the dress circle. There was an outlet from the dress circle to the gallery stairs; and persons on the gallery could come down this way, go through the dress circle, and out on Flood's-alley. There was a separate gallery stairs from the vestibule on Washington-street, about seven or eight feet wide all the way up; there was a pair of doors opening outwards, leading to the gallery. All the doors that I put in the building opened outwards; the vestibule to the stage door I did not put up. There were no means of exit from the gallery to Flood's-alley, except through the dress circle; there were no fire-escapes there from the gallery; I call the exit from the dress circle a fire-escape; there were no others that I know of on any part of the building; I am not familiar with the fire-escape law in Brooklyn; I do not even now think that fire-escapes were necessary on Flood's-alley from the gallery. People going to the theatre get accustomed to the regular way and would look for no other, and if they did find a fire-escape there, they would overcrowd and probably cause a greater loss of life. The Brooklyn Theatre was as well provided with means of exit as any theatre that I know of. There was a fire-hydrant and hose on the stage for the suppression of fires when the theatre was first built; I always put it in; it was a regular fire-hose; I do not know what became of it. When Mrs. Conway was there she always had pails of water up in the flies, and also under the stage where the dressing-rooms were. There were two platforms on the gallery stairs, and only two, to the best of my recollection. This made two bends at right angles. There was no access to this stairs from any other part of the house except the dress circle. The beams under this stairs were extra strong girders, 12 by 12 inches; beams, some 4 by 12, and some 3 by 12; some Georgia pine and some white pine; they were built in and anchored in the walls. I do not think those stairs could have become broken down from any number of persons from the gallery unless they were first injured by fire. The other passages and stairways were equally strong. The building was put up by day's work, of the best materials, and particular attention was paid to the gas arrangements and border lights. If this fire occurred from a border light, either the border light or the border was not properly hung. The borders may be allowed to touch the border lights by carelessness or a strong draft, but they ought not to do so.

George L. Morse, sworn, says—I live at 613, Carlton-avenue. I am an architect, doing business in Brooklyn for 17 years; I have examined the ruins of the Brooklyn Theatre; I have also examined the plans of the Brooklyn Theatre as submitted by Mr. Jackson, the architect; I should say after an examination the building was well constructed beyond question, as far as stability was concerned. I refer now to the stability and construction only. The main walls were built 16 and 20 inches thick; the walls were 16 inches, enlarged to 20 inches under the trusses of the roof; they were built of the best hard brick, and laid in hydraulic cement mortar, and "grouted." The building was well timbered and substantial in every particular. It was heated by steam, low pressure, by direct and indirect radiation. The heating apparatus was in good order. I reconstructed the heating apparatus a year ago, and I should think it was safe as against fire. I am satisfied it was safe against fire. As to the means of egress, the minimum width of passage way from the parquet and dress circle, at the end of the building, where the audience is to find exit, is 16 feet 8 inches. From the dress circle it was seven feet, and from the family circle or gallery, six feet. According to the plans there were 400 sittings in the balcony, and 250 in the orchestra chairs, making 650 on this level. Deducting the seven foot passage way from the dress circle there would be left nine feet eight inches, which it would be proper to allow for the exit of the 650 sittings on this level, so that we have nine foot eight minimum width of passage way for 650 sittings on the first level; seven feet for the 450 sittings in the dress circle, and six feet for the 350 sittings in the family circle or upper gallery. My opinion is, that an audience of 1,450 people, if they were there, could easily find their way out if there was no jam or obstruction, in from two minutes and a half to three minutes. The stairs to the gallery were entirely separate from the passage-way, to or from other parts of the house, with the exception of a door way into the dress circle on the first landing, at the ticket office, for the upper tier. I understand the object of that door was to afford additional means of exit from the dress circle in case of fire; I am not able to say whether it was open on this occasion or not. If this door was open, the people in the gallery might have passed through the dress circle and down the main stairs.

Q. Was it practicable, as the building was situated, to have had a fire-escape from the gallery to Flood's-alley on the outside?

A. It would have been possible to have constructed a fire-escape on Flood's-alley, but it would have been worse than useless in such a jam. An iron staircase outside would have been an effectual relief, but would have been an encroachment on a public thoroughfare; I think the means of exit were decidedly better than the average of public buildings. The staircase leading to the upper gallery was in two straight runs, without winders; the size of the landing at the head of the first flight was 14 feet by 6 feet 8 inches. As to the strength of the stairs leading to the gallery, the first flight, which is not entirely destroyed, is very substantial, and would not give way under any load of people that could get on to it. I suppose the other flight was built in the same manner. I do not believe those stairs gave way until they were burned away. It is very improbable.

Q. Was there any means of escape for those on the gallery by way of the roof?

A. I don't think there was; the roof of the theatre was a steep, double pitch roof. I cannot tell anything about the arrangement of the scenery or border lights from the plans.

Q. Can you tell why it was that the fire reached the roof of the gallery in less than four minutes from the time it broke out?

A. The scenery and the material and fixtures of the stage were very inflammable, and there was an immense amount of this material there. The flames must have spread with the greatest rapidity. As soon as the fire was well under way, all the glass in the Johnson-street windows must have been broken out by the heat. The stage entrance door, if not the large double doors on Johnson-street, must have been opened to allow those on the stage to pass out. On that night the wind was blowing from the north or north-west, which would strike directly against that front to the building, so that there was a strong current of air which carried a blast of smoke, heat, and flame directly to the other end of the building, where the crowd were struggling to get out. This accounts for the rapidity with which the fire moved from the stage to the other end of the building, and the consequent loss of life.

Robert McNally, sworn, says—I live at 233, Smith-street, Brooklyn. I am a carpenter and builder, and have been a theatre carpenter for many years. I worked at the building of the Brooklyn Theatre, and I am familiar with the stairs and their construction. I have also examined the plans to-day. The gallery stairs, from Washington-street up to the dress circle, were one straight flight, 6 feet 8 inches wide, and substantially built. There was one turn at right angle at the top of the first flight. There was then another right angle and a platform on the flight reaching to the gallery lobby. There was then an open space in the centre, and three or four steps up to reach the seats in the gallery. There were no other means of exit from the gallery. This was sufficient for ordinary purposes, but not enough in case of panic or fire. I built the first flight, and helped to get out the material for the others. The material was of the best quality, and the stairs were well built. I do not believe they could contain human beings enough to break them down, unless the supporting timbers were burnt. I do not think they did break down until burnt down. The means of exit from the other parts of the house were sufficient for ordinary purposes, but not enough in case of fire or panic. There could have been more doors on the east side, opening on Flood's alley. The gallery ceiling was constructed of thin pine boards, covered with muslin and frescoed. The dome was constructed of similar material, except that it was covered with heavy gilded mouldings. There was a boarded floor over the dome ceiling, with a large space between that and the roof. This was used for a property man's room and a carpenter shop. I know that there was a hose coupling in the basement, north-west corner of the building, when the house was first built, to be used in case of fire. I have been a stage carpenter for nearly a quarter of a century, and built a great many stages. I helped to build this one, and built the stage in Academy of Music, and a great many others. The stage of the Brooklyn Theatre was well built, but if I had charge of the scenery and machinery, I would have made it different. As it was, there were two faucets of water, inch pipes, on the painter's gallery. They could not be used with hose, but would furnish water for pails in case of fire. I know of no other water supply up there. There was this difficulty with the stage machinery: from what I can learn the border lights were not properly protected with gauze wire, and consequently one of the borders caught on the gas jet. This was the cause and commencement of the fire. A hose applied at that moment would have prevented the fire. They had too many drop scenes between the border lights, so that they became entangled in each other, and finally struck the border lights. They brought this extra scenery from the Union Square Theatre, New York, to play "Julius Cæsar," the "Long Strike," and other plays in Brooklyn. This I know from the men who were employed on the stage. There should have been a strong brick wall across the structure, where the proscenium was reaching from cellar to roof, leaving an arch in the centre for a drop curtain; and then there should have been one corrugated iron curtain hung on chains, the same as those used on stores. This could be dropped down in case of fire, thus preventing the draft and spread of the fire from the stage to the auditorium. In this case of the Brooklyn Theatre, the whole proscenium was comprised of the same inflammable material as the ceiling of the auditorium, and this increased the rapidity of the flames and the consequent loss of life. I had complimentary tickets given to me, but I would not go in the gallery of that theatre at night. I was afraid of an accident in that gallery. Above the stage it was all open. There is such a wall as I speak of in the Academy of Music here, with iron shutters between the rigging gallery and dome.

John P. Smith, sworn, says—I live at 18, Prospect-place, Brooklyn, and was manager of the Brooklyn Theatre about a year and a half under Mrs. Conway; of the Park Theatre one season, and of others in Washington and elsewhere for several years. I have also played attractions in almost every prominent theatre in America. I was thoroughly familiar with the stage arrangements, and of the entire building of the Brooklyn Theatre. I paid especial attention to the appliances for the protection of life. I was at the fire about five minutes after it broke out, and watched its progress. During Mrs. Conway's time we had in the rigging loft buckets filled with water, and at the back of the stage, near the storm door, a coil of fire-hose attached to the regular fire hydrant of the building. This could have been used at all times at a moment's notice, and it was the express and explicit instructions of the management that no obstructions should be placed at or about this hose at any time, so as to prevent its being used if necessary. The hose was there when I went in the theatre. I never saw but the one hose, but this would reach from the back to the front of the stage. The orders were to the stage hands to turn the water on immediately, on the least indication of fire. We never had occasion to use this hose. I left it there in good order when I left in June 1874, and I have seen it there when Clara Morris played her last engagement there. I think about the week commencing November 9 last. I was then and I am still Miss Morris' business manager. We had also a number of axes down under the stage, marked "Not to be used except in case of fire." I think I saw those in November also. Under Mrs. Conway every possible precaution was taken against the danger of fire. I know nothing about Shook and Palmer's orders in this respect, but presume they were strict, knowing them to be thorough practical men. No obstructions were allowed to be placd against the large stage doors leading to Johnson-street. We considered the means of egress from the stage was very good. There were two large doors and one small door leading to Johnson-street. Another under the stage to the area-way on Johnson-street. A private underground passage to the box office known to everybody connected with the building. There was another underground passage to the waterclosets, running parallel with Flood's-alley, and leading to the main stairs. Mr. Studley and other actors escaped this way. The means of egress from the parquet and dress circle were as good as any I ever saw in other theatres. My instructions to the ushers and others were that they should never leave their places until after the performance was over. The chief usher was instructed to pay particular attention to the door leading to Flood's-alley from the parquet, and to examine its condition every evening before the performance, and to never leave its vicinity until after the performance. Similar instructions were given to the ushers in the dress circle in regard to the door leading from the dress circle to the gallery stairs to Washington-street. These orders I know were obeyed, because I personally supervised them. There was one main stairs leading leading from Washington-street to the gallery, and this was the only means of exit from the gallery. It was larger than the general run of gallery stairs, and furnished much better means of exit than I found from the gallery of several other theatres which I have been in throughout the United States. I always paid particular attention to the gallery of the Brooklyn Theatre, and instructed officer Lott to never be away from his post. My idea is that soon after the fire commenced, some one broke open the storm doors on Johnson-street, and this increased the draft and hastened the progress of the flames. The origin of the fire, I should think, was caused by disarranging the borders while raising the piece of scenery used as a ceiling for the mimic house. When I was at this theatre the stage-manager was peremptorily instructed by me not to leave the stage during the play under penalty of dismissal. I was in front of the theatre five minutes after the fire broke out, and watched the gallery entrance particularly, but saw very few come out, and I then thought the performance was over before the fire commenced. A short time afterwards I met Mr. Rogers, the business manager, and asked him, "How was your house to-night?" and he informed me "a little over 500 dollars." I then asked how many in the gallery, and he said 405 tickets had been sold. I was then convinced that two-thirds of those people lost their lives, and so stated to several persons. I think that several persons lost their lives in the dress circle.

William C. Kingsley, sworn, says—I live at 176, Cumberland-street, Brooklyn. I am one of the owners of the Brooklyn Theatre. It was built by the Brooklyn Building Association in 1870 and 1871. When it was determined to build the theatre, in looking for an architect, Mr. Thomas R. Jackson was very highly recommended to us as a man of great ability and experience in his profession, who, we believed at that time, had more experience in building theatres and large public buildings than any other architect in the vicinity of New York, for we knew that he had been the architect in the construction of Wallack's Theatre, the Albany Theatre, the Boston Theatre, the present Academy of Music in New York, and the present Tammany Hall in New York, and many other large buildings. He made a personal examination of the ground upon which the theatre was built, and reported to us that in his judgment he could construct a theatre on that ground, capable of holding 1,500 or 1,600 people, that would be equal in all respects to any theatre in the country. We then requested him to make and submit to us plans, together with an approximate estimate of the cost, telling him that if we concluded to build a theatre we wanted it first-class in all respects. He then submitted his plans and the approximate estimate of the cost of construction. We took some weeks to examine his plans, and come to a conclusion which was to build the theatre under Mr. Jackson's supervision. My partner, Colonel Keeney, took personal supervision of the work, giving it his whole time and attention, and employing skilful mechanics in all the various branches of the work, and doing it all by day's work and not by contract, he being directed and advised constantly by the architect. I have no recollection of any failure in any respect wherein the architect's plans were not fully, carefully and minutely carried out. The ground upon which the theatre was built was valued at 70,000 dollars. The building, exclusive of the ground, cost 127,899,083 dollars. The building was completed and opened by Mrs. Conway, to whom it had been previously leased, in October 1871. When it was completed the architect repeatedly told us, and as we believed then and now it was one of the most substantially built and arranged for health, comfort, and safety of any theatre that we know of. The modes of ingress and egress were thought to be ample, and superior to most theatres, churches and other public buildings in proportion to its holding capacity. There was on the stage a 2½-inch water pipe, near the large double doors, where there was also a fire hydrant. We purchased a hose and had it attached to that hydrant, to be constantly kept there, when we turned it over to Mrs. Conway. There was on the stage another smaller water pipe, with a hydrant attached, located up over the scenery in the scenic room. These afforded facilities for getting water rapidly and in large quantities on the stage. My son and Colonel Snodgrass, a gentleman about 75 years of age, from Pennsylvania, who was visiting at my house, went to the theatre that night; occupied the directors' box, and at the end of 4th Act, Colonel Snodgrass, seeming to be tired and fatigued, my son told him that if he did not desire to stop and see the play through, that he would go home with him, which he concluded to do at the close of the 4th Act, whereupon they left the theatre and went home. Those are all of my family who were in the theatre that night. I was at the time the fire commenced in the parlours of the Brooklyn Club, within two blocks of the theatre. A member of the club, who was on the second floor at the time, looked out at the window and saw the fire on the roof of the theatre, came down stairs and told us the Brooklyn Theatre was on fire. I, with several others, ran out immediately, and around to the theatre, where I found a very large crowd outside kept back from the building by the police. The firemen were at work playing hose and throwing water on the building. I made my way through the crowd and through the police line, and got to the main entrance of the theatre. The doors were closed. I asked a policeman, who who stood near by if everyone had got out of the theatre. He replied, seemingly in a very confident way, that they had all got out. I immediately found Mr. Rochford, the head usher, on the parquet floor, who had been employed there for years, and he also assured me that everybody had got out. I then asked him if he saw any of my family come out of the theatre. He replied that my son and an old gentleman came out at the end of the 4th Act. I remained about the building and the fire until about 3 a.m., and I had no idea, nor did any of the many people with whom I talked have any idea, that there was any loss of life, with one exception, and there was a rumour that Mr. Murdock, one of the actors, was lost. About 2 o'clock that rumour came to me contradicted—somebody telling me that Mr. Murdock was seen to come out of the theatre. So that while the destruction of property was known to be very large, I went home after 3 o'clock in the morning, feeling very well and believing that there had been no loss of life. The lessees at that time were Messrs. Shook and Palmer, the managers of the Union-square Theatre, New York. They had a lease of the theatre for four years from the 1st August 1875. Their reputation as managers is very good—as careful, reliable, successful, and enterprising managers. The loss on the building and fixtures is about 128,000 dollars; insured for 40,000 dollars.

LORD COCHRANE'S PETITION.

RETURN to an Address of the Honourable The House of Commons, dated 1 March 1877;—for,

“COPY of the PETITION to HER MAJESTY from the Hon. Douglas Mackinnon Baillie Hamilton Cochrane, commonly called Lord Cochrane, praying Her Majesty to complete the gracious Act of Royal Justice which restored the late Lord Dundonald to his Rank and Honours; and also of the SIGNATURES by which that PETITION was commended to HER MAJESTY'S gracious Consideration.”

TO HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

The Humble PETITION of the Honourable Douglas Mackinnon Baillie Hamilton Cochrane, commonly called Lord Cochrane, Sheweth:—

YOUR Majesty's Petitioner humbly prays your Majesty that your Majesty may be graciously pleased to order that compensation be made to him, as the legatee of the late Earl of Dundonald, in respect of the loss of the pay and allowances of the late Earl, as a naval officer in the Royal Service, for a period of 18 years. That period commenced with the expulsion of the Earl of Dundonald from the service, for an offence of which your Majesty's Petitioner ventures to believe it has long since been acknowledged that he was innocent, and it terminated with his restoration to the rank in the service which but for that expulsion he would have attained.

Your Majesty's Petitioner, in recalling shortly the achievements and services of the late Earl of Dundonald, desires not only to avail himself of the answer to the charges made against the Earl which a long and gallant career affords, but to claim for him the gratitude due from the British nation to one by whom the glory of the British name was raised, and British interests materially advanced.

Before the trial and condemnation, by which the career of the Earl of Dundonald in the Royal Service was brought to a premature termination, the Earl had served your Majesty's Royal Predecessor with a gallantry and success which his representative trusts he may be permitted to say places his name among those of the heroes of British annals.

The history of the great naval war in which this country was engaged against the French and Spanish nations at the beginning of the present century, full as it is of records of skill and gallantry displayed by individual officers in the Royal Service, contains no instances in which romantic daring was more splendidly associated with sagacious calculation than the exploits of Lord Dundonald. It so happened that in the services in which he was engaged he was frequently compelled to act with very inadequate forces at his disposal and with no judgment to rely on but his own. But his resolutions were full of resource and determination, and by little more than his personal gallantry, and the same spirit inspired by him in the handful of men under his command, he effected results of no inconsiderable importance.

Your Majesty's Petitioner ventures to specify the first of the operations conducted by Lord Dundonald in an independent command, as one of which the incidents aptly illustrate the character of his subsequent achievements. In command of the “Speedy,” a brig of diminutive size, with a crew of 54 men, he boarded and captured the Spanish Frigate “El Gamo,” whose tonnage was four times that of the British vessel, whose crew was six times as numerous, and the weight of whose armament seven times as great. The victory was achieved partly by skill in manœuvring, partly by the vigour of a hand-to-hand combat; and while the number of the enemy killed exceeded the total number of the British crew, the loss in Lord Dundonald's ship consisted only of four men killed and 17 wounded. Immediately after her capture, the frigate was attacked by numerous gunboats from the port of Barcelona, but in spite of their opposition Lord Dundonald carried off his prize in safety.

In the 14 months during which Lord Dundonald commanded the "Speedy," he took, burned or destroyed vessels of war, mounting together 122 guns; he re-took nine vessels from the enemy, and, acting in company with other forces, he captured 11 privateers, gunboats, and merchantmen. The sobriquet of "le loup de mer," which was applied to him by Napoleon the First, expresses the apprehensions which these exploits inspired in the enemy; and for his various services Lord Dundonald repeatedly received the thanks of Lord Keith, the British Admiral in command.

In the command both of the "Pallas" of 32 guns, and the "Imperieuse" of 44, Lord Dundonald again found numerous opportunities of effecting brilliant services. In the "Pallas" he was present at the blockade of Rochefort. Subsequently, he disabled the French ship "La Minerve," a frigate of 44 guns, although she was supported by three French brigs of 18 guns each. On another occasion, with the boats of his frigate, he succeeded in cutting out the French guard ship "La Tapageuse," stationed in the river Garonne, in spite of the opposition of two other vessels of war; and while his boats were thus employed, and with only 40 men remaining on board, he attacked with his frigate two French corvettes of 22 guns each, and a large French frigate, and drove them on shore.

In the "Imperieuse" he carried on a series of operations along the coast of Catalonia by which many ships of the enemy were captured, the services of large bodies of their troops engrossed, and the roads along the coast destroyed. The Semaphoric Telegraphs, by which they had established communications throughout that part of the country, were rendered useless, and the result of one expedition was that a French general was compelled to abandon the whole of his artillery and ammunition. "Nothing can exceed," wrote Vice-Admiral Lord Collingwood, then in command of the Mediterranean squadron, "the zeal and activity with which his Lordship pursues the enemy. The success which attends his enterprises clearly indicate with what skill and activity they are conducted, besides keeping the coast in constant alarm, causing a general suspension of trade, and harassing a large body of troops employed in opposing him." Nor was Lord Dundonald less gallant or successful when for a time he performed services on shore. Displaying a spirit and ability which Lord Collingwood, in his official report to the Admiralty, described as "heroic," he maintained the castle of Trinidad, by which the citadel and town of Rosas were defended, for a whole month against a French force far superior in number, and with the advantage of a commanding position. The Spanish commander, by whom he was preceded, considered the fort untenable, and had determined to abandon it. But the resources and gallantry of Lord Dundonald rendered even a neglected and ill-provided fortress an obstacle against which the repeated efforts of a chosen body of French troops were exerted again and again in vain.

A few months later Lord Dundonald was consulted by Lord Mulgrave, the First Lord of the Admiralty, on the means of attacking a French fleet then concentrated in the Basque Roads, from which serious danger was apprehended. The French vessels lay in so strong a position that Lord Gambier, the Admiral in command, estimated an attack on them as "hazardous, if not desperate," and the protection afforded to them by forts and an enormous boom rendered the employment of fire vessels against them impracticable. Lord Dundonald suggested the novel expedient of the use of "explosive vessels," or vessels filled with explosive materials, by which the boom might be blown up. His suggestion was adopted, and he was appointed to perform the special service of the attack. The effort was attended with marked success. The boom was destroyed, the fleet of the enemy was struck with panic, and of their number the "Ville de Varsovie" of 84 guns, the "Aquila" of 74, and the "Calcutta" of 50, were taken and burnt, and the "Tonneur" of 74 guns, and the "Indienne" of 44, were set on fire by their own crews. To commemorate this exploit of the British fleet a special medal was struck, and Lord Dundonald was honoured with the dignity of the Order of the Bath, an honour only once before conferred on an officer under the rank of Admiral, and the only honour received by Lord Dundonald from the British Crown.

Five years passed, and then occurred the circumstances of which the effect was to change the fortunes of Lord Dundonald's life, and to inflict on him a cruel punishment, long since admitted to have been undeserved, but of which the consequences have not yet been wholly removed. Your Majesty's Petitioner does not desire to recall the incidents of the trial of Lord Dundonald, still less to scrutinize the evidence on which he was convicted, as if his defence were now to be made. The years which have elapsed have calmed the feelings of political partizanship, and not only by the expression of public opinion, but by the restoration of Lord Dundonald to his honours, it has been admitted that he was unjustly condemned for an act of which, if others were guilty, he was not. But your Majesty's Petitioner would venture to dwell for a moment on the peculiar hardship to which Lord Dundonald was subjected. The offence of which he was accused, a conspiracy to affect the price of the funds by means of the diffusion of false reports on the Stock Exchange, was a charge peculiarly galling to a brave and sensitive man. At his trial, the prejudice of a great and eloquent Chief Justice was, from some unknown cause, excited against him, and, thence, upon evidence now universally admitted to have been imperfect and insufficient, he was found guilty. A new trial was refused to him on the technical ground that the other persons charged with him, who had escaped and left the country, did not join in the application. Public opinion successfully demanded that the indignity of standing in the pillory should be spared him, but a great part of his sentence was rigorously exacted; he was confined in prison for a year, a fine of 1,000*l.* was enforced, his banner as a Knight of the Bath was torn down from its place in Westminster Abbey with every mark of public ignominy, and he was expelled from the service which had been the pride and ambition of his life.

Many men would have been crushed by such misfortunes, or would have brooded in an obscure exile over such injustice, and such a fall. Your Majesty's Petitioner may claim for Lord Dundonald that, banished as he was with every mark of disgrace, he manfully faced the storm which threatened to overwhelm him, and, in a new career, not only displayed the same qualities which he had exhibited in his country's service, but was enabled to confer signal benefits on the British nation, and on the cause of freedom.

He entered into the service, first, of the Chilian and Peruvian Republics, and subsequently of the Empire of Brazil, nations which were then commencing their struggle for independence. By a series of achievements accomplished with utterly inadequate means, he raised these countries to the rank of independent States, and to his efforts the world owes it that these Republics of South America were enabled to shake off the enfeebled and enfeebling grasp of Spain; and Brazil, then a dependency of Portugal, succeeded in proclaiming itself a free and constitutional empire.

Your Majesty's Petitioner will not dwell on the details of the achievements by which these results were accomplished. The cutting out of the Spanish frigate "Esmeralda," from under the guns of Callao, and the storming of Valdivia, the Gibraltar of South America, were acts the skill and daring of which have gained a conspicuous place in naval history.

It may be that the result of these achievements has been to effect greater benefits to the British nation and to the world, than could have been accomplished by Lord Dundonald had he remained in the service of his own country. To effect the liberties of the Spanish provinces in America, to save their future from being as the future of Cuba, needed the skill and energy of a great commander, such as those provinces could not themselves supply, or could not, perhaps, except in Lord Dundonald, have found. The result of his victories was to open the ports on both sides of the vast South American continent, up to that time practically closed to British commerce by the prohibitive duties of Spain and Portugal; and the dependencies of Chili, Peru, and Brazil, have grown into great and free nations, whose prosperity has created and developed the South American trade of Great Britain.

In connection with these incidents, your Majesty's Petitioner ventures to recall the fact that Lord Dundonald refused to put into execution, for the purpose of taking the fortress of Callao, the plans which he had invented, and of which he believed the operation to be irresistible. The stronghold of Callao contained an enormous treasure, and Lord Dundonald was strongly pressed by his associates to use these plans for its capture. But Lord Dundonald refused, because he considered that this secret, the best fruit, as he believed, of his experience and ingenuity, should not be divulged except in the service of Great Britain. From various causes, these plans have never been carried into operation, but a committee appointed by the Board of Admiralty, in 1847, to report on them, acknowledged in ample terms the patriotism of Lord Dundonald in reserving them for the benefit of his country.

After his return from South America, the sympathy of Lord Dundonald for the cause of the oppressed led him to offer his aid to Greece, then engaged in her struggle for freedom against the Ottoman power, and he commanded the patriot fleet with success, through many difficulties, until the battle of Navarino ended the Turkish dominion on the sea.

The time at last came when it was acknowledged, though by slow degrees, that the condemnation and punishment of Lord Dundonald had been undeserved. In May 1832, he was restored to that position in the Royal Navy which he would have held had he never left the service, and was gazetted as a Rear-Admiral of the Fleet. After a further interval of time, a more ample acknowledgment was made. In May 1847, he was restored to the Order of the Bath, and gazetted a Knight Grand Cross; in the beginning of 1848 he was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the North American and West Indian stations; and in 1854 he received the distinguished honour of being personally requested by his Royal Highness the late Prince Consort to accept the office of one of the Honorary Brethren of the Trinity House.

After his death, in 1860, his insignia of the Order of the Bath were, by your Majesty's gracious order, restored to their place in King Henry the Seventh's Chapel; and thus every compensation was awarded to him except that which it is the object of your Majesty's Petitioner now to seek.

Your Majesty's Petitioner would submit most humbly to your Majesty that it is the necessary consequence of Lord Dundonald's restoration to his rank in the Royal Navy that compensation should be made to him for the pay of which, during the interval of his exclusion from the service, he had been deprived. No such compensation, however, was ever made to him. He died in the hope that this last acknowledgment of the wrongs he had suffered, if denied to him, might not be refused to those by whom he was succeeded, and by his will he bequeathed to your Majesty's Petitioner any sum your Majesty might be graciously pleased to order should be paid on account of the pay due to him as a naval officer for the 18 years of his exclusion from the service.

Your Majesty's Petitioner, the grandson of the late earl, did not become of age till the end of the year 1873, and thus, until the present time, no representative of Lord Dundonald, immediately interested, has been in a position to submit the subject of the present Petition to your Majesty's gracious consideration.

Your Majesty's Petitioner ventures to hope that, even were there no precedent for the act of Royal justice and grace for which your Majesty's Petitioner prays, it might be considered that the circumstances under which Lord Dundonald was for so many years deprived of the position which would have entitled him to the pay of a naval officer, were equally without precedent. But a precedent exists in the case of Sir Robert Wilson. That officer, who had been dismissed from his position as a general officer, was, in 1830, restored to the service, his commission stating that his rank was to be considered as bearing date from 27 May 1825. In August 1832, Sir Robert Wilson claimed the pay of a general officer from 27 May 1825, and on 28 October 1832, the Secretary at War addressed a letter to her Majesty's Treasury, recommending Sir Robert Wilson's claim of pay as a special case, in the view that the act of Royal favour should be considered to extend to pay as well as to rank. This letter was acted on, and the pay in question allowed by order of his Majesty's Treasury.

Shortly before his death, Lord Dundonald wrote: "Sir Robert Wilson claimed his back pay as a right consequent on his unjust deprivation, and obtained it; I have unceasingly done the same, not from the pecuniary value of the amount due, but from the consideration that its being withheld still operates as a stigma on my character and family, which is inconsistent with my restoration to the service. My efforts have hitherto been without success."

Your Majesty's Petitioner humbly prays your Majesty that your Majesty will be graciously pleased, by acceding to the prayer of this Petition, to complete the gracious act of Royal justice which restored Lord Dundonald to his rank and honours.

And your Majesty's Petitioner will ever pray, &c.

MEMORANDUM of the Canadian Minister of Agriculture upon reference of a Despatch of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, on the Subject of the COLORADO BEETLE.

THE undersigned, in accordance with a request of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, having carefully examined the Despatches of Lord Carnarvon, respectively bearing date the 3rd of March 1875 and the 28th of August 1876, has the honour to report as follows :

The occasion of considering measures for the prevention of the introduction of the Colorado potato beetle into other countries from Canada has not yet presented itself, and the information from the German authorities, conveyed to Her Majesty's Minister at Berlin, on the capture of the insect on board ships and at Bremen, as well as other information given by newspapers relative to its introduction into Sweden, shows that the beetles had come from the United States, having been shipped at ports the neighbourhoods of which were invaded by them.

The document furnished to Her Majesty's Minister at Berlin, a copy of which forms part of the Despatch of the 28th August last, contains the following remark.

“ It may be considered an almost insoluble problem in regard to transatlantic “ ships traffic to prevent by more extensive supervisional measures the introduction of these beetles in Europe.”

The difficulty thus foreseen by the German authorities cannot but be self-evident when the habits and modes of progression of the insect are examined ; for not only does it move by flying, and by navigating, so to speak, smooth water, but also travels on common vehicles, railway carriages, and platforms, on decks of vessels, &c., especially during the months of August and September.

In localities fully invaded, the beetles may be seen creeping on side walks, bridges, and wharves, crawling up buildings, occupying fences, lodging themselves in every crevice, penetrating houses and dwellings, ascending and occupying vehicles of all sorts, finding their way into boats and vessels, placing themselves on any and every article, and being found alive after a long sojourn in situations where there would seem to exist no chance for them to find any subsistence.

Such a short but correct exposé of the habits of the beetle as connected with the possibility of its penetrating almost anywhere, and by almost any means of transport, renders indeed insoluble the problem of absolutely preventing its inroad into new fields of devastation, no matter how remote or by what obstacles they may be separated from the regions already invaded.

It may be remarked in this respect that potatoes and their covering are neither more nor less apt to harbour the insect than anything else.

But if the absolute repelling of the invader is unfortunately beyond reach, the extent of the disaster is fortunately in a very great measure under control, involving, of course, care and expense.

The remedies which necessity has taught on this side of the Atlantic are such as to require for their application the joint effort of the community at large, kept alive to its interests and duties by the authorities, and men of devotedness to the common welfare.

These remedies are,—

- 1st. Searching for and crushing every potato beetle wherever found.
- 2nd. Frequent visits to the potato fields, and searching for the eggs deposited on the under side of the leaves of the potato vine; and
3. Watching for the presence of the larvæ on the buds, and on the leaves of the plant in order to destroy them by means of Paris Green, the only substance yet discovered to be effectually operative on a large scale for the destruction of the insect in its larva state.

By these means, and by these means only, the invaded American States, and the western part of Canada, have been able to secure potato crops in a measure commensurate with the care and energy bestowed and by similar means only can the invasion be retarded and lessened in its effects.

No measure has been taken in Canada, for reasons given, to prevent the falling or creeping of individual insects on board ships loading in Dominion seaports.

There is, however, almost a certainty that the environs of Montreal will be invaded next year, and with that prospect in view, general orders may be given to public officers and employés of the ports to look for and destroy any beetles which might be observed on the wharves, on sheds, on packages of goods to be embarked, or on board ships. A general appeal might also be made to all persons having to deal with the shipping for assistance in the execution of such preventive measures.

The undersigned respectfully recommends the adoption of such precautions, beyond which he does not see that there is anything within the power of the Canadian Government to do.

The whole respectfully submitted.

LETTER from Dr. J. Macdonald, of Ontario, to the Secretary of State for the Home Department.

" Sir,

" London, Ontario, 24 May 1877.

" WITH reference to the instructions which have been issued to the Commissioners of Customs on the subject of the Colorado potato beetle, I beg to suggest as a superior means to enable the officers of Customs to ascertain its identity, that they be provided with these insects preserved and enclosed in small glass cases. And, with a view to aid in carrying out this suggestion, should you think favourably of it, I shall, with this communication, enclose a few specimens which I have prepared.

" I could furnish any number of such preparations. The country around this town is swarming with the beetle in question.

I am, &c.

" P.S.— It might be productive of good results were preparations, such as those I have sent, distributed to landlords, holders of land, and to all parties having a direct interest in preventing the Colorado beetle from establishing itself in the United Kingdom. So doing would no doubt facilitate its detection, should it unfortunately be introduced, and, as a matter of course, its prompt destruction. It is a well known fact that this insect increases with extreme rapidity.

"Berlin, 27 June 1877.

"MINISTRY of AGRICULTURE as yet possess no reliable information respecting appearance of Colorado beetle at Mülheim. They have sent Professor Gerstaker, entomologist, to investigate and report. TELEGRAM from Her Majesty's Consul General at Düsseldorf, dated 28th June 1877.

"COLORADO beetle was found with larvæ numerous in a potato field near Mülheim. Yesterday, before the authorities, the field was fired with sawdust and petroleum. One beetle was seen on the wing. It is feared the plague may spread."

LETTER from Her Majesty's Vice Consul at Cologne, dated 27th June 1877, and Translation of Reports from "Cologne Gazette" and "Stadt-Anzeiger," &c.

"Sir,

"Cologne, 27 June 1877.

"I HASTEN to send you the different reports on the Colorado beetle, which I have found in the different editions of the 'Cologne Gazette' and the 'Stadt-Anzeiger,' supposing that they will give you a better insight into the present state of the approaching plague than a personal report could do.

"The Government, as well as the public, seem to take the matter seriously enough, so we will hope that their united endeavours will succeed in preventing further devastation.

"It seems to be a fact, that the insect found on a potato field near Mülheim, on the Rhine, belonging to a butcher, who imports American bacon, is the real Colorado beetle. The chrysalis of the insect appears in considerable, but the beetle itself in more confined, quantities till now, on about one-fifth of the field, which measures about 20 acres.

"It was reported that the insect had appeared already on another potato field near Mülheim. This, however, has been strictly contradicted in yesterday's evening paper.

"I shall follow up the progress of this lamentable discovery, and report further what may be of interest to you.

I have, &c.

THE COLORADO BEETLE.

"Cologne Gazette," II. —25th June.

THE Colorado or potato beetle having been found near Mülheim, on the Rhine, as we reported in the first paper to day, it appears appropriate to recall to memory the following communications from an article on this dreaded destroyer of one of our principal means of subsistence, published in No. 45 of this paper in the year 1875.

The State of Missouri has appointed an entomologist, Charles Riley, who is to collect all observations on the subject, and to publish them. This is done in the "annual report on the noxious, beneficial, and other insects of the State of Missouri." The last report, of the year 1875, gives the most recent information concerning the Colorado beetle. The insect passes the winter in the ground; but as soon as the potato plants are up and the first leaves developed, the beetle appears. The female then lays her orange-coloured eggs in clusters of 10 to 12 on the underside of the leaves; from these eggs come the larvæ in five to eight days, and they carry on their work of destruction during 14 to 20 days. Then they change into the chrysalis state, and from 10 to 14 days afterwards the beetles come out. The deposit of eggs begins again, and so three generations may be produced in the course of one summer, the last of which hides in the ground and passes the winter there.

To the latest report, a Mr. Henry Gillman, of Detroit, Michigan, appends remarks on the attachment of the beetle to other plants. On the 19th of June 1872, he found it on young grass, upon which, as well as in the neighbouring potato fields, it had laid eggs. A month later he found beetles and larvæ close to a well-nigh ruined potato field, devouring the young blossoms and leaves of cirsium lanceolatum, amaranthus retroflexus, sisymerium officinale, polygonum hydropiper, solanum nigrum. After two or three weeks the thickest stalks of thistles were eaten away, nearly all the leaves destroyed, and the bloom heads hanging withered. At the same time he observed the insect on chenopodium hybridum, and chenopodium album, and in August of the same year, both beetles and larvæ greedily feeding on hyoscyamus niger, upon which eggs also were to be found. On this, Mr. Gillman observes that it is a significant fact that the insect takes to henbane, which was brought from Europe to America, therefore it does not seek out the native plants only.

These examples show what an extraordinary aptitude the beetle has to accommodate itself to its food, and to this circumstance is to be attributed the difficulty of extirpating it when it has once got a lodgment. The insect lived originally on the wild solanææ of the Rocky Mountains. As cultivation advanced towards the west, the potato fields drew nearer the habitation of the animal; upon these it settled, and, with the extended feeding ground, the insect increased with such inconceivable rapidity as to become a general pest to the country. In the year 1859, its progress towards the east had already begun, and the foremost parts of the swarm have now reached the Atlantic coast, whilst the main body has still some way to make. When this also arrives at the coasts it may be expected that the insect will pass over into Europe, and probably into Ireland first. In 1874 the migration continued without interruption, and in Ohio three or four swarms of this beetle were observed following each other in the course of an hour or two. Impartial observers estimate the number of a swarm at 10,000 insects. Some beetles remained behind as the flights passed on, the work of destruction began, and consternation spread amongst the agriculturists.

The means which have been adopted for the extirpation of the beetles are of three kinds.

1. Promoting the increase of the beetles' enemies. This, however, does not appear to have been successful, although nature comes to the aid of man, for with the insect the feeding ground of its enemy also extends, and thus promotes their increase.

2. Mechanical means. The simplest, and for a long time the only known defensive means was gathering by hand. But this is so expensive that it is only worth while when the price of potatoes is so high as to render them an article of luxury. "The New York Tribune" quotes instances wherein it took 50 days' work in the course of a summer to pick an acre, therefore about 120 would be required for a hectare. This would make picking impossible in Germany, even if school children were employed. The heavy expense has also led to the introduction of machines for gathering, such as tongs for crushing the insects and larvæ, boxes with springs to be fixed on the stems, small barrels with forked jogging apparatus, but none of them have been quite effective.

3. Chemical means. Of all these that have been tried, such as blue vitriol, green vitriol, chloride of lime, carbonate of lime, one has been very much approved of, that is Paris (Schweinfurt) green (arseniated oxide of copper). It is used in two forms, dry and mixed with water; in the latter case a tablespoonful of pure green is reckoned for a bucket of water. In both cases it is mixed with flour to make it stick to the plants. The application of the dry powder is most advantageous, as it can be equally distributed over the plants by means of dredgers, but the danger of poisoning men and animals is greater. Neither can the powdering take place at all times of the day, but chiefly on dewy mornings and in the evening. The application with water has, therefore, been more generally adopted, as it can be done at any time. This also has its disadvantages, which, however, may be decreased by clever operation: 1. Paris green is not soluble in water and therefore soon goes to the bottom; in order to prevent this, the liquid must be continually stirred while the sprinkling is going on. 2. The liquid rests in the hollows of the leaves and deposits the coloured matter too thickly. 3. Therefore much of it falls on the ground and is wasted. 4. It is not easy to mix the green, the flour, and the water, so that the flour shall not form clots. Therefore a special mixing apparatus is required. The success of this means is, however, so great, that the fear of the beetles' devastations has very much decreased; and as experiments have shown that the ground is in no way poisoned by the green, as was at first supposed, this means is now coming more and more into use. The expense is reckoned at about 12 marks per hectare.

We gather from a communication sent to us by Mr. Proff, of Mülheim, to-day, that the potato beetle has already been found in at least two neighbouring fields. Mr. Proff concludes his letter by requesting us to publish the intelligence at once (we had already done done so), so that every exertion may be made by the Agricultural Ministry, as well as the Agricultural Society, to prevent the further spreading of the terrible pest.

The distinguished entomologist, Professor Dr. Förster, of Aix-la-Chapelle, to whom some beetles have been sent, says, with reason, "If the multiplication of the voracious insect goes on here as fast as in America, very soon no field in the Rhine province will be spared. This enemy must be destroyed, and even out-of-the-way means ought to be adopted to effect this." We have to state hereon, that we have already informed the Agricultural Ministry, by telegraph, of the appearance of the beetle here.

The Colorado beetles that have come into our possession we have placed at the disposal of the chief burgomaster. He will have them shown to the market people from the country, and likewise to the pupils of the public schools here, so as to promote the utter annihilation of the foe to our potato fields. A proposition made by an inhabitant here ought to be seriously encouraged, viz., that a good number of eggs, larvæ, and beetles be collected in glass cases, fed there, and then be subjected to experiment by chemists, to ascertain how they can be most easily and quickly destroyed. In addition to this, we would recommend that the collecting and taking away the beetles by officious persons be strictly forbidden, so that the insects may not be spread about through carelessness.

"Cologne News," 25th June.

We have received information from Mülheim, on the Rhine, that larvæ of beetles, and also beetle eggs, which to all appearance come from the Colorado beetle, have been found in a potato field near that place. The field belongs to a butcher who imports bacon from America, and it is, therefore, supposed that the said beetles have come over with the bacon. Further investigation will show how far this sad intelligence is true.

"Cologne Gazette," II.—26th June.

As the Colorado beetle has but just appeared in some places at Mülheim, a correspondent recommends, as a simple and effectual means, to cover the plots of ground in question with sawdust or dry tanner's bark, to pour a couple of casks of petroleum over it, and set it on fire, which would make the ground so hot that no living thing could remain in it. This would cost but very little for a parish or a district in comparison with the damage that would arise from neglect.

(See next communication.)

Cologne, 26th June.

As we have obtained accurate information to-day in our neighbour town of Mülheim, respecting the appearance of the Colorado beetle, we are able to impart the gratifying intelligence that as yet the destructive insect has only spread over a space of five acres in a large potato field containing 20 acres. In order to prevent the dispersion of the beetle, Mr. Landrath V. Reisewand will immediately have the infested plot placed under strict inspection, and on the arrival of the President of the Government, who will be at Mülheim at half-past four this afternoon, will take measures for the radical extirpation of the voracious insects, which for the most part occur in the larvæ shape, with but few specimens of the beetle. Probable the infested field will be covered with straw, hay, and shavings, and these be well saturated with petroleum, then the whole will be set fire to, and the ground afterwards purified by corrosive acids.

After close investigation, it appears that the fields surrounding the one in question have not yet been attacked by the mischief, and a statement that the beetle had been found on a distant potato plot turns out to be quite false.

Town Advertizer of the "Cologne Gazette,"—26th June 1877.

LOCAL NEWS.

On account of the immense importance of the matter, we repeat here the information given in the first issue of our paper yesterday, respecting the discovery of the Colorado beetle in a potato field near Mülheim; unfortunately, as will appear from the close of this notice, the dreaded insect has already appeared in other parts of our province. The owner of the Rhenish Asphalt and Coal Tar Works, at Mülheim on Rhine, Sturmergasse 10, Mr. Bernhard Zimmermann, wrote us yesterday, as follows: "A man came to me to-day with a little box containing several beetle larvæ of a peculiar form; he said he had found them in a potato field near Mülheim, and asked me whether I knew them. I remembered the descriptions of the American potato beetle published in the newspapers, and thought the appearance of the larvæ corresponded with them. I went at once with the man to the said field, and found eggs, larvæ, and full-formed beetles on the potato plants there. The larvæ are shining red, and show two rows of black spots on the two sides. The body of the beetle is likewise red, the wings yellow, with 10 black stripes lengthwise. The size of the beetles is about a centimètre, but I do not know whether they are full grown. Larvæ and beetles devour the potato plant with great voracity. It appears that the field belongs to a butcher who sells American bacon. This circumstance strengthened my opinion that the little voracious animal might be the Colorado beetle, the pest of the American potato fields, because I thought that the eggs of the insect might have come across the ocean in the packing of the meat, and then have got to the field."

Mr. Zimmermann brought with him to us a number of the larvæ that he suspects, and two beetles in a glass, and he has the beetle in all forms of development at his house ready for inspection. That we really have the wretched foe of the potato field before us we can hardly doubt, inasmuch as the beetle shows on its wingcases the 10 lines corresponding with its name of doryphora decemlineata. It is, therefore, of the greatest importance to adopt immediate measures for its extirpation. The Colorado beetles which came into our possession we have placed at the disposal of the chief burgomaster; he will have them shown to the market people from the country, and to the pupils of the public schools here, in order to promote a radical extinction of this enemy of our potato fields. A proposition made by an inhabitant here ought to be warmly recommended, viz., to collect a good number of eggs, larvæ, and beetles in glass cases, to feed them there, and then to have experiments made by chemists to ascertain the easiest and quickest way of destroying them. In addition to this, we would recommend that meddling persons be everywhere strictly forbidden to collect and carry away the beetles, lest they be spread about through carelessness.

“Cologne Gazette,” 27th June.

A LETTER from Mülheim tells us that “the state of affairs concerning the Colorado beetle is as follows: the larvæ feed in a restricted spot; they are mostly of a good size already. The pupæ rest in the ground, and send forth, as it appears, the beetles in daily, nay, hourly increasing numbers. These make all the surrounding country unsafe, for they are found beyond the feeding ground of the larvæ. Their dispersion is promoted by the wind, and still more, as well as that of the larvæ, by the numerous collectors, of whom a great many were present to-day, and they are not decreased by the shutting off. This is certainly not a time to rest in confidence; every day the danger increases by the hatching of the beetles, which, it is to be hoped, belong to the first generation. This is a time for energetic measures, such as those against the cattle plague.”

“Cologne Gazette,” 27th June.

As we obtained accurate information yesterday at noon, in our neighbour town of Mülheim, respecting the appearance of the Colorado beetle, we are able to give the satisfactory intelligence that as yet the destructive insect has only spread over a space of five acres in a large potato field containing twenty acres. In order to prevent the dispersion of the beetle, Mr. Landrath von Riese wand has already had the infested spot placed under strict inspection, and, after an arrangement with the President of the Government, will adopt measures for the radical extirpation of the voracious insects, which for the most part occur in the larva state, with only a few specimens of the beetle. Probably the infested field will be covered with straw, hay, and shavings, and these will be well saturated with petroleum; then the whole will be set fire to, and the ground will be afterwards purified by corrosive acids. After close investigation, it appears that the fields surrounding the one in question have not yet been attacked by the pest; and a statement that the beetle had made its appearance in a distant potato plot turns out to be quite false.

DESPATCH from Her Majesty's Consul General at Düsseldorf.

My Lord,

Düsseldorf, 29 June 1877.

No discovery has as yet been made as to the manner in which the Colorado beetle was imported into the field in which it was found on the 24th instant near Mülheim. The statement that the owner of the field, being an importer of American bacon, may have had Colorado beetles' eggs in his bacon cases is as yet the only plausible one that has been given. The field, which I visited yesterday, is a large one, but edged on one side by houses; one of them, I believe, the property and residence of the importer above mentioned.

As yet no signs of an extension of the beetle-plague have been discovered; but the authorities are apprehensive that it may spread, and they have issued a notice to the following effect:—

“The potato beetle (chrisomela decemlineata), commonly called the Colorado beetle, has undoubtedly been found in a field by Mülheim-am-Rhein. The ravages which this insect is well known to cause induce the issue of the following police order:

“1. Every owner, user, or lessee of fields planted with potatoes is bound to give notice of the appearance of the Colorado beetle, or its brood, to the police of his place of habitation.” (Here follows a full description of the beetle and its larvæ and eggs.)

“2. Whoever

" 2. Whoever shall neglect this duty will be fined from 9 to 30 marks, or suffer proportionate imprisonment.

" Neglect will be held to have been shown whenever, on revision, larvæ shall have been found in any potato field.

LETTER from Mr. MacDonell to the Earl of Derby.

My Lord,

Berlin, 30 June 1877.

WITH reference to my telegram to your Lordship, No. 45 Commercial, of the 27th instant, on the subject of the appearance of the Colorado beetle at Mülheim, I have now the honour to report that in answer to my inquiries at the Imperial Sanitary Office, which has been entrusted by Prince Bismarck's order with the investigation of the matter, I have been informed that a report has been received from Dr. Sell, professor of chemistry, who was sent to devise the best means of destroying the insect.

Dr. Sell states that there is no doubt that the insect is really the much dreaded Colorado beetle, but that prompt means have been taken for its destruction in the field where it appeared, which is only of about the extent of one hectare.

The sanitary office have promised to furnish me with a copy of Dr. Sell's report on Monday, when I shall be able to send your Lordship further particulars.

LETTER from Mr. MacDonell to the Earl of Derby.

My Lord,

Berlin, 4 July 1877.

WITH reference to my Despatch, No. 46 Commercial, of the 30th ultimo, I have the honour to enclose herewith a précis of the report made by Dr. Sell to the Imperial German Sanitary Office, on the subject of the appearance of the Colorado beetle, together with a précis from the "Gazette of the Empire" on the same subject.

I have, &c.

(signed) B. G. MacDonell.

The Earl of Derby,
&c. &c. &c.

In his Report to Dr. Struck, the director of the Sanitary Office of the Empire, Dr. Sell states that he visited the field where the Colorado beetle was said to have appeared, and that there is no doubt that it is the much dreaded beetle, as Dr. Gerstäcker has also reported.

The field, which is about one hectare in extent, had been burnt with petroleum before Dr. Sell's arrival, and the vegetables in the neighbouring fields cut and burnt by way of precaution. On the day following, a search for traces of the beetle was almost without result, but the next morning from 40 to 50 larvæ and chrysalides were dug out in presence of the reporter and Professor Gerstäcker at a depth not exceeding from 10 to 12 centimètres.

Another burning of the field was to take place at once, and Dr. Sell proposed the application of an alkaline preparation composed of about 100 hectolitres of raw potash and limewash, which should be worked into the ground, and from which he promised a successful result.

In spite of every precaution which could be taken by the authorities there was still a fear that collectors or the curious might spread the evil, and with a view of preventing this a notice has been issued that all persons in possession of larvæ or chrysalides should hand them over to the authorities, under pain of a fine; the public are also called upon to give any information in their power with regard to the existence of the insect; and all owners of potato fields in the mayoralty have been directed, also under pain of fine, to have them closely inspected at least twice a week.

Dr. Sell concludes by stating that, in his opinion, everything has been done on the part of the local officials which can entail the entire extermination of the plague.

Précis of Account in the "Gazette of the Empire" of the Colorado Beetles' appearance at Mülheim.

ON the 25th of June it became known to the authorities for the first time that a strange insect had appeared in a field close to the town of Mülheim, and that it was feared that it was the Colorado beetle, which turned out to be the case.

The piece of land attacked by the insect is about five hectares in extent, divided among different proprietors, and all planted with potatoes. It is bounded on one side by a road, and on the other three sides by pieces of ground planted with other vegetables.

The point at which the beetle was first found was in the middle of the potato ground, where it existed in great quantity and, with the exception of the chrysalis, in every stage of development.

The deep yellow eggs were on the under side of the leaves, while the larvæ were found on the upper.

These latter were of different sizes, from that of a small vetch, up to the dimensions of a coffee bean; and it was observed at the same time that all larvæ feeding on the same plant were of equal size with one another. Beetles were found in small number, and it appeared that they were not yet able to fly.

The most careful investigation respecting the manner in which the insect was introduced has hitherto been without success, but it is considered that its introduction by American bacon is improbable.

LETTER from Mr. Harris to the Earl of Derby.

My Lord,

The Hague, 5 July 1877.

I HAVE the honour to communicate to your Lordship the following statement, which has been published in the official gazette of the Netherlands by the Minister for the Home Department.

"While the steamboat 'Rotterdam,' with goods from New York, was being unladen at Rotterdam, an insect was discovered on the ground and sent up to the Home Department, where it has been declared to be a living female Colorado beetle, Doryphora aecemlineata."

"The minister draws the attention of the public to the repeated warnings given by the Government, and to the description and engraving of the insect issued and published by the Home Department, and draws particular attention to the fact of the discovery of the above-mentioned specimen, and requests everybody to assist in preventing the general calamity that would result from the introduction of the Colorado beetle into the potato fields, by making inquiries, and by killing the injurious insect."

I have the honour further to state, from information just received from the Home Department, that the ship, in unloading which the above-mentioned insect was discovered, contained a cargo of general goods, and that the beetle was found on or in the vicinity of a chest of onions, that was subsequently destroyed.

Nothing else is known concerning the Colorado beetle; it has not yet made its appearance in the potato fields of this country.

An engraving, with a description of the insect, is herewith inclosed.

I have, &c.

The Earl of Derby,
&c. &c. &c.

THE COLORADO BEETLE.

THE Colorado beetle (d), which has committed such frightful ravages in the potato fields of America, when seen from above, has the shape of our native green brass beetle, but it is a little larger, about 11 to 12 millimètres (7-16ths inch) long. Its colour is a flesh tint, red or ruddy dove colour, with black eyes, 18 small black spots and specks on the thorax, and five curved stripes lengthwise on each wingcase (e). The knees and tarses of the legs are black. The stripe along the suture of the wingcases is very narrow, the others are rather broad; the side edges of these stripes are not sharply defined, and between them are seen a good many fine diminutive black or brown speckles on the dove-coloured ground.

The eggs (a) are glued fast by the mother beetle to the underside of the leaves, in little clusters of 30, or a few more or less. They are rather more than 2 millimètres (1-13th inch) long, and 0·7 millimètres broad, smooth, deep yellow or orange colour, and of a cylindrical shape, rounded at both ends. Within five or six days the young larvæ (b) make their appearance from these eggs. At first they are blood red; this colour subsequently changes to a flesh tint. The full-grown larvæ (c) are between 8 and 9 millimètres (7-20ths inch) long, thick and swelling out behind the second ring of the body; projecting like a hump on the back, pointed at the end, bare all over, and without any pimples or warts. The circular shaped head, somewhat indented in front, is of a glossy black, with a whitish upper lip, four small black eyes on each side, protected by little bristly hairs; the upper jaw has five small teeth. The thorax is white at the fore edge, then black, whilst the other longest part is flesh coloured, with many small olive brown spots, each separately formed of two specks. The remaining part of the body is flesh coloured or yellowish, with two rows of round black spots, one above another, at the sides. The six legs, of which the hindmost are rather long, have black hips and white thighs, with shanks and tarses black on the upper and white on the under side.

After having ravaged the plants for 19 days, or nearly three weeks, the larvæ, being full grown, creeps into the earth and turns into a chrysalis, from which, in summer, the beetle appears after 10 or 12 days. There are three generations every year, and the last spends the whole of the winter in the pupa state under ground.

If you meet with this formidable enemy of the potato field, in any shape whatever, kill it at once.

Published by the Home department.

1 November 1872.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Local Government Board to forward, for the consideration of the Court of Quarter Sessions, a copy of the Act to amend the Law for the prevention of Adulteration of Food and Drink and of Drugs, which received the Royal Assent during the last Session of Parliament.

By Section 5 of the Act provision is made for the appointment by the Court of Quarter Sessions of every county of one or more persons possessing competent medical, chemical, and microscopical knowledge, as analysts of all articles of food, drink, and drugs purchased within the county. The section also provides that the analysts shall be paid such salary or allowances as the Court of Quarter Sessions may think fit; and that the appointment and removal of these officers shall be subject to the approval of the Local Government Board.

The Board, in calling the attention of the Justices to these important provisions, direct me to state that they are desirous of being informed what steps the Court of Quarter Sessions have taken, or propose to take, with respect to the appointments contemplated by the Act.

I am directed to add, that when the appointment of an analyst is submitted to the Board for approval, satisfactory evidence must be furnished of his qualifications for the office; and the Board will be glad to be informed at the same time of the salary or remuneration it is intended he shall receive.

Local Government Board, Whitehall, S.W.,

14 April 1873.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Local Government Board to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 3rd ultimo, from which it appears that Mr. John Jones Bancroft, who has been appointed public analyst for the county of Denbigh for a period of three months, is engaged in business in the district as a pharmaceutical chemist and druggist.

The Board direct me to state that they have had under their consideration, generally, the question of the appointment as analysts of persons engaged in the business referred to.

The Board desire to point out that, in the discharge of the duties of analyst, it devolves upon Mr. Bancroft to analyse all samples of drugs submitted to him by competent authority, whether such samples are obtained from other chemists in the district or from himself.

The Board are of opinion that such an arrangement is evidently objectionable, and they must therefore request that the point may be considered by the Local Authority before any new appointment or a re-appointment of analyst is proposed.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Local Government Board to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 20th ultimo, in which, with reference to their communication of the 19th ultimo, you inform them of the circumstances under which the Justices of the Peace for the County of Denbigh, at the Court of Quarter Sessions, held on the 8th April 1875, suspended the appointment of Mr. John Jones Bancroft as analyst for the county.

Adverting to the remarks with which your letter concludes, I am directed to state that there appears to be a misapprehension as to the effect of Section 5 of the Statute 35 & 36 Vict., as that statute does not confer any power on the justices to suspend an analyst, and that his office cannot be determined without the approval of this Board.

COUNTY of DENBIGH, to wit:

AT the General Quarter Sessions of the Peace of our Sovereign Lady the Queen, held at the County Hall in Ruthin, in and for the county of Denbigh, on Thursday the fifth day of July, in the forty-first year of the reign of our Sovereign Lady Victoria, now Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and so forth, in the year of our Lord One thousand eight hundred and seventy-seven, before Thomas Hughes and William Cornwallis West, Esquires, and others, their companions, Justices of our said Lady the Queen, assigned to keep the peace of our said Lady the Queen in the said county, and also to hear and determine divers felonies, trespasses, and other misdemeanours committed within the said county:

Ordered, That Mr. John Jones Bancroft be removed from the office of analyst of this county, subject to the approval of the Local Government Board, the Court deeming the continuance of the office of analyst in this county unnecessary.

By the Court,

The Local Government Board to Mr. Peers.

Local Government Board, Whitehall, S.W.,
19 July 1877.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Local Government Board to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 7th instant, transmitting an order of the Court of Quarter Sessions for the county of Denbigh removing, subject to the approval of this Board, Mr. John Jones Bancroft from the office of analyst for the county.

The Board observe that the reason assigned by the Court for making this order is, that they deem the continuance of the office of analyst for the county unnecessary.

The Board therefore direct me to call attention to Section 10 of "The Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875" (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), which enacts, that the several authorities herein specified, may, as soon as convenient after the passing of the Act, where no appointment has been hitherto made, "and in all cases as and when vacancies in the office occur," or when so required so to do by the Local Government Board, shall for their respective city, districts, counties, or boroughs appoint one or more persons possessing competent knowledge, skill, and experience as analysts.

The Justices will therefore perceive that in all cases in which an analyst has been appointed, and the office becomes legally vacant, it is incumbent upon the local authority to proceed, in pursuance of the express provisions of the statute, to make a new appointment.

Consequently if the Board were to give their assent to the removal of Mr. Bancroft which as at present advised, they are not prepared to do, it would be necessary for the Justices to make another appointment.

Enclosure in No. 1.

PETITION of the Provost, Magistrates, and Town Council of the Royal Burgh of Dumfries.

Unto the Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty’s Treasury, the Petition of the Provost, Magistrates, and Town Council of the Royal Burgh of Dumfries

Humbly sheweth,

THAT the small property of Kingholm, distant half a mile from the town of Dumfries, and situated within the Royal burgh and parish of Dumfries, devolved upon the Crown as ultima hæres, in December 1868.

That thereafter various parties made application to the Crown for a gift of the estate of Kingholm, including, among others, the present Petitioners, the Royal burgh of Dumfries.

That the claims of these different parties having been duly and carefully considered by the then Lords of Her Majesty’s Treasury, the Petition by the Royal

Royal burgh of Dumfries was preferred and sustained, and the Queen's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer was directed by the Treasury to dispose of the estate in the manner set forth in the following communication from the Lords of the Treasury, which was printed and produced as a Return to an Order of the House of Commons, dated 28th March 1873 :—

“ Sir, “ Treasury Chambers, 18 March 1873.
 “ WITH reference to your Report of the 17th ultimo, upon the applications for “ a gift of the estate of Mrs. Elizabeth Brooks or Wood, fallen to the Crown as “ ultima hæres, I am directed by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's “ Treasury, to state that, in compliance with your suggestion, my Lords autho“ rise you to prepare a warrant of gift of the estate of the deceased Mrs. Wood, “ under the usual conditions, in favour of the magistrates and council of the “ burgh of Dumfries, and the sheriff and sheriff's substitute for the time being “ of Dumfries and Galloway, in trust—

- “ 1. To pay to Mrs. Sandwith 3,000 £., free of per-centage and expense.
- “ 2. To pay the legacies contained in the draft deed of Mr. Hannah, on “ the assumption that such legacies had vested at the date of Mr. Hannah's “ death, but without interest.
- “ 3. To preserve and maintain such part of the landed estate as may be “ settled, as a park for the recreation of the public.
- “ 4. To make effectual to the War Office, all such uses consistent with “ the Trust, No. 3, of the ground, as may be required by that department.
- “ 5. To apply the remaining income to the improvement of education “ in Dumfries and Galloway, in such manner as may be approved by “ the ‘ Scotch Education Department,’ appointed under the Act 35 & 36
 “ Vict. c. 62.

“ I am, &c.
 “ The Queen's and Lord Treasurer's (signed) “ William Law.”
 “ Remembrancer, N.B.”

That thereafter the Queen's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer addressed and sent a letter to the Provost of the Royal burgh of Dumfries in the following terms :—

Estate of Hannahfield.

“ Sir, Exchequer, Edinburgh, 19 March 1873.
 “ I beg leave to inform you, that the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's “ Treasury have authorised me to prepare a warrant of gift of the estate of the “ deceased Mrs. Wood in favour of the magistrates and town council of the “ burgh of Dumfries, and sheriffs and sheriff substitutes for the time being “ having jurisdiction in Dumfries and Galloway, in trust, and I have to request “ that you will direct the law agent of the magistrates and town council to “ confer with me, in order that the conditions and burdens of the trust may “ be fully explained to him, and the terms of the deed of gift settled.

“ I am, &c.
 (signed) “ Stair Agnew, Q. & L. T. R.”
 “ Thomas Ferguson Smith, Esq.,
 “ Provost of Dumfries.”

That immediately on receipt of the above letter, the provost summoned a meeting of the magistrates, town council, and inhabitants of Dumfries, for the special purpose of having the terms of Her Majesty's most gracious gift to the burgh publicly proclaimed, and formally accepted by your petitioners on behalf of the burgh. At this meeting, which was held in the town hall, and numerously attended, the letter from the Queen and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer was publicly read by the town clerk, and ordered to be inserted in the records of the burgh.

That this important gift of Her Majesty to the Royal burgh of Dumfries, was not only duly announced in all the newspapers of the day, but was publicly celebrated celebrated within the burgh, by the ringing of the town bells, and other manifestations of rejoicing on the part of the inhabitants; and the acceptance of the gift by the magistrates and council, and re-acquisition of the estate of Kingholm, the ancient patrimony of the burgh, gave universal satisfaction to the whole community of Dumfriesshire, numbering in all upwards of 70,000 of Her Majesty's loyal subjects.

That immediately after the acceptance and publication of the gift, Mr. William Kennedy, writer to the Signet, the agent for the Burgh of Dumfries in Edinburgh, put himself in communication with the Queen and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, and of this date, received from him for revision on behalf of the burgh, a draft of the charter or deed of conveyance, to be granted by Her Majesty to the magistrates and council of Dumfries, and the sheriff and sheriff's substitute for the time being, of Dumfries and Galloway, in trust for completing their feudal investiture under the gift.

18th June 1873.

That, as the chief object of Her Majesty's grant was the formation of a park for the recreation of the public of Dumfries, subject to the uses of the War Office, the magistrates, your Petitioners, employed Mr. John Starforth, an architect of eminence in Edinburgh, to prepare a plan of the grounds of Kingholm with the view of showing how this could be best attained. A plan was accordingly prepared by him, which was submitted to, and after certain alterations thereon, was approved of by Colonel Gordon on behalf of the War Office, on 23rd June 1873.

That the draft charter, or deed of conveyance having been, with Mr. Starforth's plan, submitted to the agent of the War Office in Edinburgh (the late Mr. William Waddell, writer to the Signet), the draft charter was revised and marked as approved of by him on 5th September 1873, and the plan was retained by him, to be deposited in the War Office.

Thereafter the draft charter was of same date returned by him to Mr. William Kennedy, by whom it was revised, on behalf of the Royal burgh of Dumfries, and it was returned by him to the Queen and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer for engrossment on 6th October 1873.

That since that time, upwards of three years have elapsed, and your Petitioners, as trustees for the Royal burgh of Dumfries, have not yet been able to get their title to the estate, so graciously gifted to them by Her Majesty, completed.

That your Petitioners have reason to believe that the Treasury Warrant has already been acted upon, to the effect of payment having been made to Mrs. Sandwith of the 3,000*l.*, under burden of which the estate was granted to the magistrates and council of the burgh of Dumfries, and other trustees named in the Warrant.

That as trustees for the Royal burgh of Dumfries, your Petitioners have already incurred grave reproach and blame for the long delay which has taken place in investing the burgh in its rights, and thereby depriving the community of the many advantages, in a sanitary point of view and otherwise, conferred on them by the grant.

Wherefore your Petitioners humbly pray your Lordships to direct the Queen and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer forthwith to give effect to Her Majesty's gift of date 18th March 1873, by delivering to your Petitioners as trustees in terms thereof, a proper charter or conveyance for completing their title to estate in question.

And your Petitioners will ever pray.

Signed and sealed at the Town Hall, Dumfries, this sixteenth day of March Eighteen hundred and seventy-seven years.

Provost.

— No. 2. —

The Secretary to the Treasury to the Provost of Dumfries.

Sir,

Treasury Chambers, 20 April 1877.

I HAVE laid before the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury the Memorial, forwarded in Mr. Kennedy's letter of the 16th ultimo, from the magistrates and town council of the burgh of Dumfries, with respect to the estate of the late Mrs. Wood of Hannahfield, and I have now received their Lordships' instructions thereon.

They desire me to observe that the letter of this Board of 18th March 1873, to the Queen and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, which is quoted in the Memorial, states succinctly the decision at which the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury had, after careful deliberation, arrived with regard to the disposal of the estate, and it also mentions the means by which at that time it was proposed to carry out the intentions of the Board, viz., by appointing a body of trustees, consisting of the magistrates and council of Dumfries, and the sheriff and sheriff's substitute of Dumfries and Galloway, in whom the whole estate might be vested under trust for the purposes specified. In accordance with the instructions conveyed in the letter, the Queen and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer placed himself in communication with the persons interested in the proposed gift, including the authorities of the burgh, with a view to preparing the requisite warrant of gift, but, as you are doubtless aware from the communications you have had with that officer, great difficulties presented themselves in the way of making the trusts effectual, and more especially in respect of the trust which my Lords have always regarded as the one of primary importance, viz., the one in favour of education. The circumstances have from time to time been most carefully considered, and it has now been finally decided to adopt a different method of carrying out the intentions of my Lords, and instead of vesting the land in the council and sheriffs, to vest it in the War Office; subject, however, to the same conditions with respect to the maintenance of the lands of Kingholm, as a public park, as would have been imposed upon the council and sheriffs had the fee been vested in them.

My Lords trust that the magistrates and council will not misapprehend the meaning of this proceeding. It in no way implies a departure from the principles of the distribution indicated in the letter of the 18th March 1873, it merely introduces a variation in the method by which that distribution is to be carried out. From the first it was the wish and intention of this Board that (subject to two main considerations, (1) that a portion of the land should be available for purposes of public recreation, and (2) that it should be available for military purposes) the whole estate (less certain specific donations, and the share usually retained by the Crown) should be devoted to purposes of education, which would be carrying out the views of the former owner of the property, Mr. John Hannah; these continue to be the objects which their Lordships are desirous of securing.

They believe that the plan which has now been adopted will facilitate the completion of these objects, and they have only to assure the magistrates and council that, so far as the question of a public park is concerned, the rights and privileges which it was intended to bestow on the inhabitants of Dumfries shall be as amply secured as they would have been under the original scheme.

The Provost of Dumfries.

— No. 3. —

The Provost of Dumfries to the Secretary to the Treasury.

Sir,

Town Hall, Dumfries, June 1877.

I HAD the honour to receive your letter of 20th April 1877, in answer to the Memorial of the magistrates and council of the Royal burgh of Dumfries to the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, with respect to the estate of the late Mrs. Wood of Hannahfield.

I duly laid the same before the magistrates and council, and they have instructed me to reply as follows:—

The magistrates and council of the burgh of Dumfries and the inhabitants thereof felt greatly aggrieved and surprised at the announcement of the important and unlooked-for change made by the Treasury in the destination of this estate, and the magistrates and council, as trustees for the public, are at a loss to know what they have done to forfeit the confidence of the Crown.

They cannot for a moment admit to their Lordships that your explanation and interpretation of the Treasury Letter of 18th March 1873, and of the donum to the Secretary of State for War are correct, or that the rights reserved in the donum to the inhabitants of Dumfries are at all commensurate with those previously secured to them by the Treasury Letter, or with those admitted and agreed to by the War Office as shown in the draft revised charter in the possession of the Treasury.

The change now made in the destination of the estate is not only a direct departure from the terms of the Treasury Letter, but, in so far as the magistrates and council of Dumfries are concerned, it is intended to operate as a revocation of the grant previously authorised by the Treasury to be made to them, and which grant the then Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Baxter, publicly stated in the House of Commons had been so made, in answer to a question put to him to that effect by Lord C. J. Hamilton, M.P., on 27th March 1873.

Nor can the magistrates and council admit the accuracy of the facts stated, or the force of the reasons alleged by you as a justification of the change made in the destination of the estate. The alleged difficulties in carrying out the trust for education were not, it is believed, of a nature to conflict or be inconsistent with the continuance of the grant to the magistrates and council. It only applied to personal estate, and had no connection with the settlement of the heritable estate, otherwise the conveyance of that estate to the Secretary for War could not have taken place.

But whatever the difficulties alluded to in your letter may have been, they were never made known or explained to the magistrates and council, or their agents, by the Queen and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, and they were not consulted nor afforded an opportunity of hearing that gentleman's views in regard to the difficulties which are alleged to have arisen in giving effect to the trust.

On the contrary, the Queen and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, throughout the negotiations had with him, invariably led the magistrates and council and their agent to believe that no radical change was contemplated in their rights as donees under the original grant, and he never hinted at a revocation of the grant such as has now been made.

It was at his request that the magistrates and council first put themselves in communication with him, and in consequence of his unequivocal acceptance and recognition of them as the donees of the grant, and relying upon the good faith of the Crown fully implementing what, after due consideration, it had so explicitly given, the magistrates and council entered into engagements and came under obligations of a pecuniary nature for the proposed park, which otherwise they would not have done.

The magistrates and council think they were entitled to have been informed of the difficulties which had arisen in reference to the trust for education, and that it would have been only courteous to have consulted them thereon before declaring these difficulties so insuperable as to exclude them from administering that trust. This exclusion is rendered more painful to them from the fact that the owner of the estate, Mr. Hannah, received a free education in the burgh school or academy of Dumfries, and that it is a violation of his last intentions, which were to convey his estate to the burgh for educational and other purposes.

The magistrates and council cannot believe that their Lordships of the Treasury would willingly do an injustice to any of Her Majesty's subjects, far less cast an unmerited slight upon the representatives of a Royal burgh which has always been distinguished for its loyalty, and, therefore, they assume that the change made in the original grant by the issuing of the donum was sanctioned by their Lordships in ignorance of what their officials in Scotland had done, or under a misapprehension of the real facts of the case.

They are the more readily led to think so from the circumstance that the tenor of your letter implies that the Memorial of the magistrates and council had been duly considered by their Lordships before the alteration of the grant, whereas on a comparison of dates, it appears that, in point of fact, the transfer of the estate to the Secretary of State for War must have been resolved on, and the donum prepared some considerable time before the Memorial of the magistrates and council of Dumfries reached the Treasury, for the donum bears to have been signed by the Queen at Windsor on 17th March 1877, the very day the Memorial of the magistrates and council was received at the Treasury.

That being so, and the donum having been issued before the facts in the Memorial could have been known to or considered by their Lordships, the magistrates and council feel that they would be neglectful of their duty, as acting for the community of Dumfries, if they did not make one more effort to obtain redress.

They cannot suppose that had their Lordships been fully aware of the whole facts of the case, they would in the circumstances have advised the Crown to exercise its high prerogative of cancelling a grant already made to and accepted by the magistrates and council of the burgh of Dumfries, and in good faith so far acted upon as to create obligations that cannot now be resiled or departed from.

In these circumstances the magistrates and council earnestly pray that their Lordships may yet see cause to alter their decision with reference to this estate, or at least give effect to the spirit of the Petition of Right Act of 1860, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 24, and ordain that justice shall be done in this matter as between subject and subject.

And for that purpose the magistrates and council, who, as trustees for the community of Dumfries, are placed in a position of peculiar difficulty and delicacy, have respectfully to ask you to request their Lordships of Her Majesty's Treasury to order an investigation and inquiry into the whole circumstances which have taken place in reference to this estate, and allow them to appear before their Lordships by counsel, and be heard for their interest on the facts and law of the case.

Should their Lordships order such inquiry, the magistrates and council are satisfied, from an investigation of the facts, and the letters and other documents in their possession which have from time to time passed between them, the Treasury officials in Scotland, and the War Office, and the letters and other communications which have passed between the Treasury officials and John H. Johnstone, Member of Parliament for the county of Dumfries, (at present incapacitated from attending to business, and unfortunately unable to support the claim of the burgh, as he has hitherto done), that such an amount of evidence will be laid before their Lordships as will, it is believed, satisfy them that the magistrates and council had, as donees under the original grant or Treasury Letter, acquired such an equitable right and vested interest in the estate in question, as to make the issuing of the donum to the Secretary of State for War, in the peculiar circumstances of the case, an unwarranted, inexpedient, and unconstitutional exercise of the Royal prerogative, fraught with evil consequences to the public, and calculated to impair and weaken in the hearts of the community of Dumfries those feelings of gratitude, affection, and loyalty towards the Crown which the announcement of the original gift by Her Majesty to the magistrates and council of Dumfries, and reacquisition of its ancient patrimony of Kingholm, did so much to call forth and extend.

I am, &c.

W. H. Smith, Esq., M.P.,
Treasury Chambers, London,

— No. 4. —

Mr. W. Law to the Provost of Dumfries.

Sir,

Treasury Chambers, 21 December 1877.

I AM commanded by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to inform you that they have had before them your letter of June last, relative to the proceedings of this Board with respect to the disposition of the estate of the late Mrs. Wood of Hannahfield.

Their Lordships regret to learn that the explanations offered in their letter of 20th April last have not proved satisfactory to the magistrates and council of the burgh, but they will endeavour once more to remove the dissatisfaction to which you have given expression by stating fully all the circumstances attending the disposal of this property, and the motives which have guided them to their ultimate decision with respect to it.

The complaint which the magistrates and council bring against this Board is briefly this, that my Lords have departed from their original intentions, as announced in their letter of 18th March 1873, to the Queen's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, and have departed from those intentions in such a way as to deprive the burgh of Dumfries of certain advantages which by that letter it had been led confidently to expect.

My Lords consider that this complaint is founded upon a misapprehension of the purport of the above-mentioned letter.

It is clear that the magistrates and council have from the first read the letter of 18th March 1873 as expressing an intention on the part of this Board of advising Her Majesty to make a gift to the burgh of the Hannahfield Estate, and they even find a motive for this in a supposed desire to restore to the burgh a property which had in former times belonged to it.

But this interpretation of the letter, and of the intentions of this Board, is altogether erroneous. The facts are these: when my Lords had considered all the circumstances connected with the estate, they arrived at the conclusion that, with one exception, Mrs. Sandwith, the friend and companion of the late Mrs. Wood, no person had any strong claim upon the bounty of the Crown in respect of the property. They were of opinion that her claims would adequately be met by a grant of 3,000 £., and this has since been paid to her. The rest of the estate remained to be dealt with on some other principle than that of personal considerations.

Amongst the documents connected with the case there was a draft deed of settlement which had been drawn up under the instructions of a recent owner of the property, Mr. John Hannah, and which, though legally invalid from being unsigned, afforded clear evidence of his intentions with regard to the disposition of his estate. His main purpose was to devote the greater part of it to the endowment of an educational institution in Dumfries, and my Lords determined to adopt this idea as the basis of their scheme of distribution.

At the same time they thought that the estate might be made to serve for other public purposes, without interference with their leading object, the encouragement of education, and accordingly they proposed to grant to the inhabitants of Dumfries the privilege of using it as a place of public recreation; to secure to the War Department the right of using the land for military purposes; and they also decided to give effect to certain specific bequests which Mr. Hannah had intended to make to members of his family.

Having thus settled the general outline of the scheme of distribution, it became necessary to consider the means by which the scheme should be carried into effect. On this point my Lords came to the conclusion that it would be advisable to create a body of trustees who should be put in possession of the whole estate, and be charged with the duty of applying it to the several purposes enumerated above, and they selected as the constituent members of this body "the magistrates and council of the burgh of Dumfries, and the sheriffs and sheriffs substitute for the time being of Dumfries and Galloway."

My Lords must ask the magistrates and council to observe that in the first place they were not to be the only members of the proposed trust, and in the second place that even if they had been, neither they nor the burgh which they represent were the recipients of the bounty of the Crown otherwise than indirectly, and subject to the conditions of the trust. Mr. Baxter's answer to Lord Claud Hamilton in the House of Commons on the 27th March 1873, confirms this, for he stated that "the Treasury decision merely carried out Mr. John Hannah's expressed intentions," of which, as he pointed out, "the main object was to found an educational institution in Dumfries for the benefit of the neighborhood." The magistrates and council of Dumfries were only mentioned in the Treasury letter of 18th March 1873, as a part of the machinery by means of which the disposition of the estate was to be effected, and had that letter been acted upon in its integrity, it would have imposed upon them a duty rather than have conferred upon them a gift.

It was, however, found inexpedient to carry out the proposal as first made, and the reasons for the change may best be shown by citing the following extract from a report made to my Lords by the Queen and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer detailing the steps taken by him on receipt of the letter:—

"The body of trustees whom it was proposed to appoint to carry into effect Mr. Hannah's settlement, consisted of two classes, viz.:—

"(1) The Town Council of the Burgh of Dumfries.

"(2) The Sheriffs and Sheriffs-substitute of Dumfries and Galloway.

"I therefore decided to communicate in the first place with the provost of Dumfries; and if I had succeeded in adjusting with him, and the law agent for the burgh, the terms of a deed giving effect to the Treasury decision under which the town council would have been willing to act as trustees, I should then have been in a position to communicate with the sheriffs, so as to ascertain their views as to the terms upon which they would be willing to act.

"I accordingly, on 19th March 1873, wrote a letter to the provost, requesting that he would direct the law agent of the magistrates and town council to confer with me, in order that the conditions and burdens of the trust may be fully explained to him, and the terms of the deed of gift settled.

"The late Mr. Kennedy, as law agent for the burgh, accordingly communicated with me, and, thereafter, from time to time, I had various interviews with him, and with the provost and others connected with Dumfries, on the subject of adjusting a draft for a warrant of gift.

"It was urged, on behalf of the burgh, that the whole land belonging to the estate should be dealt with as a gift to the burgh for the purpose of being formed into a park and ornamental grounds, and a plan was prepared and submitted to me, showing the manner in which it was proposed to carry out this design. It was further urged that a proviso should be inserted in the warrant of gift, binding the trustees to carry that plan into effect. The estimated cost of executing this plan was about 6,000 £.

"The position of the estate was at that time as follows:—

"The land extended to about 109½ acres, and professional valuers stated its value, including the buildings on it, to be 10,730 £.

"The accumulated money amounted then to about 11,500 £.

"The whole estate, real and personal, with which we had to deal was, therefore, in round numbers, about 22,000 £.

"The following fixed deductions had to be made before estimating the amount available for the purposes of the park and education:—

" Crown's share (one-fourth) - - - -	4,500
" Gift to Mrs. Sandwith - - - -	3,000
" Legacies to relations, about - - - -	500
	<hr/>
	£. 8,000

"Deducting,

“Deducting, therefore, this 8,000 £. from the personal property of 11,500 £., there remained for disposal the land consisting of 109½ acres, and a sum of about 3,500 £.

“But as the provost and authorities of the burgh proposed that the land should all be taken for a park, and laid out upon a plan estimated to cost 6,000 £., it was obvious that the whole funds to be disposed of under such an arrangement would not have sufficed to carry their scheme for a park into effect, and the purposes of an educational endowment would have been entirely neglected.

“The negotiations, after my first letter to the provost of Dumfries, requesting him to send his law agent to confer with me, were verbal, but I have no doubt whatever I made it clear that, in my opinion, any draft warrant of gift that did not provide for the purposes of education as the main object of the proposed trust, would not receive the approval of the Treasury, because it would not be in accordance with their decision, which was to give effect to the expressed intentions of Mr. Hannah.

“The provost, on his part, made it equally clear that, in his opinion, the main, if not the sole, object of the proposed warrant for a gift should be to restore to the burgh the land which it had once owned, and to form a park.

“In this position of matters I agreed to frame and place in the hands of the law agent for the burgh the form of a draft for a warrant of gift, leaving blank the provisions of the proposed trust as to the appropriation of the land, and the arrangements for a park, in order that he might fill up the blanks under the directions of the authorities of the burgh; and it was understood that the draft thus filled up so as to show what were the demands of the authorities of the burgh, should be then submitted by me to the Lord Advocate of the day, and that I should be guided by the advice of the Lord Advocate as to the steps to be taken to carry into effect the decision of the Treasury.”

My Lords have no cause to doubt the accuracy of this account of what has passed, and they think it shows clearly enough that the difficulties in the way of carrying out their objects in the manner they had at first contemplated were such as to necessitate the adoption of some other method.

They wish me to impress upon you that the purposes to which the estate is to be applied remain the same as in March 1873, and that it is only the machinery for effecting those purposes which has been changed. Their Lordships are still desirous of putting into execution the scheme which the Board then had in view, and they believe that the partial settlement which has so far been made is in complete harmony with the general design originally formed. The main element in it remains, it is true, still undisposed of, for no plan has yet been devised for applying any part of the estate to the encouragement of education. But considerable funds are now left free to be devoted to this purpose, and no time will be lost in determining the mode in which they are to be utilised. What has been done is to provide for the other objects contemplated in the letter of March 1873, and my Lords cannot admit that the provision made is inadequate or unfair to any of the parties interested. It is their wish that although the fee of the lands of Hannahfield be vested in the War Office, the inhabitants of Dumfries shall have the full and free enjoyment of them for purposes of recreation. They are unable to see that the interests of the burghers need be prejudiced by the arrangements which have been made, but as the magistrates and council seem to have apprehensions on this point, their Lordships desire me to state that they shall be happy to give their best consideration to any representation that may be made to them, and, so far as is consistent with the rights of the Secretary of State for War, they will do all they can to remedy any inconvenience which his holding the legal title to the estate may be proved to cause to the people of the burgh.

To the Provost of Dumfries.

I am, &c.

OUR Sovereign Lady Victoria, by the Grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland Queen, Defender of the Faith, ordains a Letter of Gift to be made and passed under the Quarter Seal, otherwise called the Testimonial of the Seal, appointed by the Treaty of Union to be kept and used in Scotland in place of the Great Seal thereof formerly used there in due and competent form to the following effect:—

Whereas it has been represented to us that Elizabeth Brooks, or Wood, widow of Thomas Wood, of Hannahfield and Kingholm, in the burgh of Dumfries, died intestate and without issue upon the 8th day of December 1868 and there being no one legally entitled to succeed to her estate it has fallen to Us as ultima hæres: And whereas applications for a gift of the said estate have been addressed to the Commissioners of Our Treasury by sundry persons, and the said applications having been duly considered, We are pleased to bestow a gift of a portion of the said estate (but under the reservation after mentioned in favour of Our Principal Secretary of State for the War Department, or of those having his authority, of the right and privilege after specified over the lands after mentioned) upon the provost, bailies, and members of the town council of Our Royal burgh of Dumfries, as representing the community of the said burgh, their successors in office all for the time being, in trust for the following purposes:—First, to pay to Isabella or Sandwith, wife of John Sandwith, butcher, Egremont, in the county of Cumberland, the sum of three thousand pounds free of any deduction whatever, with interest thereon at

But this gift is granted under the following conditions: first, that the said trustees shall pay the debts legally affecting the said estate; secondly, that they shall pay the expenses incurred or to be incurred by Us or by any of Our officers or others employed on Our behalf in relation to the said estate or the gift thereof; thirdly, that they shall pay one-fourth part of the residue to Our Remembrancer and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer in Scotland; and, lastly, that they shall enter into bond with sufficient security to fulfil these conditions, and to account to Us and Our Royal successors for their intromissions with the said estate whenever they may be required by the proper officer or officers appointed or to be appointed for that purpose, and to free and relieve Us and Our Royal Successors from all claims which may hereafter arise regarding the said estate. These presents shall be to the Writer of the said Seal for writing the same, and to the Keeper of the said Seal for causing the said seal to be appended thereto, a sufficient warrant.

Section I.

1. PROGRESS OF THE SURVEY.

A Reduction was made on the 31st January 1876 in the number of assistants employed on the Survey, to the extent of 90 civil assistants and 54 labourers, which has caused the progress last year to be somewhat less than it was in the preceding one.

The total area surveyed in England in 1876 has been 1,190 square miles in the following counties, viz., Derby, Stafford, Nottingham, Glamorgan, Monmouth, Carmarthen, Brecknock, Hertford, Bucks, Berks, Bedford, Oxford, Wilts, Gloucester, and Cornwall (see Section VI. of this Report and Diagram No. 1 for a more detailed statement of the progress made in the Survey of England).

The force employed has been scattered over different parts of the country, in order to give precedence to the mineral districts; but these are now nearly all surveyed, excepting the Staffordshire, Shropshire, and Leicestershire, and the Bristol coal fields; and all the Survey Divisions, except the one in Cornwall, will probably be concentrated at the end of the present year within the space roughly marked by lines joining the towns of Shrewsbury, Nottingham, Bedford, and Bristol, which it is proposed to complete before taking up the survey of Wales and of the Eastern Counties.

In Scotland 451 square miles were surveyed during the year, the survey having been almost entirely in progress in the Orkney and Shetland Isles, where the work was much retarded by bad weather and the extraordinary length of the coast-line (see Section VII., and Index Map No. 3).

In Ireland a portion of the 6-inch map of the county of Cavan and some towns, including 231 square miles, have been revised (see Section VIII., and Index Map No 5), and Maps of 193 estates containing 157,548 acres were completed during the year for the Landed Estates Court Commissioners.

The following extra surveys, for which payment is made by the local authorities, have been in hands, viz.,—1. A revision of the 5-feet plans of Edinburgh, which has been nearly completed in MS., but of which the engraving remains to be done. 2. Plans on the  $\frac{1}{500}$  and  $\frac{1}{2500}$  scales of the town of Exeter completed and about to be published. 3. A plan on the  $\frac{1}{2500}$  scale of the township of Barton on Irwell completed. 4. A survey of Oldham in Lancashire on the scale of  $\frac{1}{500}$  just commenced. This place was surveyed in 1848, and the plans were published on the scale of 5-feet to the mile; but the local authorities have represented to the First Commissioner of Her Majesty's Works that these plans are obsolete; and that, besides, they do not embrace nearly all the present town, and further, that the scale of 5-feet to the mile is not sufficiently large for their requirements.

2. PROPOSED DISTRIBUTION OF THE SURVEY PARTIES IN 1877.

England.

Two Survey Divisions will be employed during the present year in Derbyshire and a third in North Staffordshire which will also undertake the survey of Oldham in Lancashire on the scale of  $\frac{1}{500}$ .

In the South Wales District two divisions are employed, one of which has just completed Glamorganshire, and is now at work in the mineral portion of Carmarthenshire, after completing which it will take up the survey of the Bristol coal-field; the other is employed in the Forest of Dean, Brecknockshire and Monmouthshire. A sixth division will continue the Survey of Cornwall. Lastly, the three remaining divisions will be employed in Hertfordshire, Buckinghamshire, Oxfordshire, and Berkshire, which last county is very nearly finished.

Scotland.

The survey of the Shetlands will probably be completed during the fine season; after which the surveyors will be withdrawn to the Orkneys, which will, it is hoped, be completed during the winter, when the whole of Scotland will have been surveyed.

Ireland.

The revision of the county of Cavan will be continued.

3. PUBLICATION OF THE MAPS.

The publication of the Cadastral Maps on the  $\frac{1}{2500}$  and  $\frac{1}{500}$  scales has kept pace with the progress of the survey.

In the South of England the 6-inch maps of Kent and Hampshire are nearly completed. Considerable progress has also been made with the maps of Denbigh, Flint, and Cheshire.

In Scotland the 6-inch map of the last county (Ross-shire) has been commenced; and in Ireland, the engraved maps of the counties of Cavan and Westmeath are in hands.

The engraving of the new one-inch map of the South of England is progressing, and several of the sheets have been published complete excepting the hill features; all the hill engravers in the Department being occupied in completing the hills on the Scotch and Irish one-inch maps: (see Index diagrams 2<sup>a</sup>, 4 and 6).

Section II.

Comparisons of Standards.

The delicate and laborious operation of obtaining the length of Kater's Pendulum with reference to the national standards of measure has been completed and the results communicated to the India Office.

The whole of the observations necessary for this measurement were taken by Lieutenant Colonel Clarke, C.B., F.R.S., by whom the apparatus used in the comparison was devised.

PATENT ACT.

(According to the Decisions of Parliament after the Second Reading of the Bill.)

WE, William, by the Grace of God, German Emperor, King of Prussia, &c., decree, in the name of the Empire, with the sanction of the Federal Council and of the Imperial Parliament, as follows :—

First Section.—Patent Rights.

§ 1. Patents are given for new inventions which may be turned to profitable mercantile account.

Exceptions.

(1.) Inventions which, if made profitable, would run counter to the laws or to morality.

(2.) Inventions for food, beverage, or medicaments, as well as for materials which are chemically manufactured, as far as the inventions do not concern any particular procedure for the manufacture of the above things.

§ 2. An invention is not considered a new one, if at the time of giving notice of it, under the provisions of this Act, it has already been so described in print, or so openly used in the home country that its application appears possible by other experts.

Descriptions of patents officially published in foreign countries are only equal to public printed publications after the lapse of three months, dating from the day of publication.

§ 3. The person who first gives notice of the invention, according to the provisions of this Act, can claim the grant of the patent.

The applicant for the patent has no claim when the essential contents of his notification are taken from the descriptions, drawings, models, implements, arrangements, or mode of treatment applied by another person, without the latter's consent, and when in consequence he has put in a protest.

§ 4. The effect of the patent is that no one is allowed to manufacture the subject of invention for purposes of trade, to promote its circulation, or to offer it for sale without the permission of the patentee.

If the subject of invention be a mode of treatment, a machine, or other motory mechanism, a tool, or other working implement, the further effect of the patent is that no one is allowed to apply the mode of treatment or the invention without the permission of the patentee.

§ 5. The effect of the patent does not apply to any one who has begun to use the invention in the home country, or has made the necessary arrangements for its use, at the time of the notification by the patentee.

Neither does the effect of the patent come into force if the Imperial Chancellor should decide upon its being used for the army or navy, or in the interests of public welfare. But in this case the patentee has a claim to proportionate compensation upon that Empire or State which has applied for the restriction of the patent in its own particular interests, which claim has to be legally fixed in the absence of any agreement.

The effect of the patent does not extend to any contrivances for shipping which only cursorily touch the home country.

§ 6. The claim to a patent, and the rights accruing from the patent, descend to the heirs. The claim and the rights may be transferred to others, either limited or unlimited, by agreement or by enactment, in consequence of demise.

§ 7. The patent has a duration of fifteen years; this term begins with the day following upon that notification of the invention. If an invention has the improvement of another in view which is already protected by a patent in the interests of the claimant, the latter can apply for the addition of a supplementary patent, which will expire simultaneously with that for the older invention.

§ 8. A fee of 30 mark has to be paid for the grant of each patent.

With the exception of the supplementary patent (§ 7), every patent has to pay a tax at the beginning of the second and each following year of its term, amounting to 50 mark the first time, and increasing 50 mark with each year.

If a patentee can prove his destitute state, a respite may be granted him for the payment of the first and second years up to the third year of the term of the patent, and if the patent expire in the third year, they may be remitted altogether.

§ 9. The patent lapses if the patentee gives up his claim to it, or if the fees are not paid three months at the latest after they are due.

§ 10. The patent is declared to be null and void, if it be proved:—

(1.) That the invention was not fit for a patent according to §§ 1 and 2.

(2.) That the essential contents of the notification were taken from the drawings, models, implements, arrangements, or mode of treatment used by another without the latter's consent.

§ 11. The patent can be withdrawn at the end of three years:

(1.) If the patentee fail to carry out the invention on a suitable scale in the home country, or if he neglect to take the necessary measures to insure its being carried out.

(2.) If it appear right in the public interests to grant others permission to use the invention, and if the patentee refuse to give this permission in return for adequate compensation and satisfactory security.

§ 12. Whoever does not live in the home country can only claim the grant of a patent, and the rights accruing therefrom, if he have a representative in that country. The latter is authorised as a representative, in the measures taken under the provisions of this Act, as well as in the civil lawsuits concerning the patent. The actions to be brought against the patentee in these lawsuits belong to the courts of the districts in which the representative resides, in default of which they appertain to the district of the Patent Office.

Second Section.—Patent Office.

§ 13. The grant, the declaration of nullity, and the withdrawal of the patent are given and declared by the Patent Office.

The Patent Office has its seat in Berlin. It consists of three permanent members, including the Chairman, and of non-permanent members. The members are appointed by the Emperor, and the other officers by the Imperial Chancellor. The permanent members are appointed after their nomination by the Imperial Council, and if they are in the service of the Empire or the State, the appointment is made for the duration of their term of office, in the opposite case it is for life; the appointment of non-permanent members is for the period of five years. At least three of the permanent members must be qualified for the office of a judge, or for the upper administrative department; and the non-permanent members must be experts in some one branch of technics. The enactments in § 16 of the Legal Code of 31st March 1873, concerning the judicial relations of Imperial officials, do not apply to the non-permanent members.

§ 14. The Patent Office consists of several departments. These are formed in advance for at least one year. One member may belong to several departments.

There must be at least three members present to insure the competence of a department to pass a judgment when there is a question of granting a patent, two of which must be non-permanent members.

A special department has to be formed to decide upon declarations of nullity, and upon withdrawals of patents. Its decisions are given by a committee, consisting of two members, including the chairman, qualified for the office of judge or for the upper administrative department, and three other members. For other decisions the presence of three members is sufficient.

The regulations of the proceedings in civil suits, as to exclusion or refusal of judicial persons, are applied according to circumstances.

Experts who are not members may be admitted to the conferences, but they must not take part in the voting.

§ 15. The resolutions and decisions of the departments are given in the name of the Patent Office. They must be officially sent to all concerned, in writing, and furnished with reasons.

Documents concerning the duration of a term are sent through the post by means of registered letters, for which receipts are given. If such forwarding be impossible in the home country, the officer entrusted by the Patent Office with the commission fulfils it by sending it through the post, under the provisions of §§ 161, 175, for proceedings in civil suits.

Complaints may be preferred against decisions of the Patent Office.

§ 16. If the decisions of one department of the Patent Office are disputed by means of complaints preferred, the judgments upon these complaints are passed by another or several other departments.

No member may take part in these judgments after having taken part in the decisions complained of.

§ 17. The formation of the departments, the decision as to their sphere of work, the form of the proceedings, and the course of business in the Patent Office, are determined by Imperial Decree, with the sanction of the Imperial Council, as far as this Act does not make special provisions on the subject.

§ 18. The Patent Office is bound to give opinions upon questions relative to patents, if requested to do so by the courts of law. Beyond this the office is not permitted to give any judgments or opinions outside its own legal sphere of action, without the sanction of the Imperial Chancellor.

§ 19. The Patent Office keeps a register, which gives an account of the subjects and duration of all patents conferred, as well as the name and residence of the patentees, and the representatives authorised by them at the time of the notification of invention. The beginning, the course, the expiration, the declaration of nullity, and the withdrawal of the patent are to be noticed in the register simultaneously with their publication in the "Imperial Gazette."

If a change takes place in the person of the patentee, or of his representative, this must likewise be noticed in the register, and published in the "Official Gazette," after the fact has been substantially proved to the Patent Office. So long as this has not taken place, the former patentee and his former representative continue in their rights and duties according to the provisions of this Act.

The register, descriptions, drawings, models, and patterns, upon the strength of which the patent has been granted, are open to everyone as long as there is no question of a patent reserved for the use of the army or navy in the name of the Imperial Administration.

The Patent Office publishes the essential parts of the descriptions and drawings, as far as they are open to the public, in an official paper. The same has to reprint the advertisements which the "Imperial Gazette" is obliged to publish under the provisions of this Act.

Third Section.—Mode of Proceeding with regard to Patents.

§ 20. The notification of an invention, with a view to acquiring a patent, must be sent to the Patent Office in writing. Each invention requires a special notification. The notification must contain the application for the grant of the patent, whilst in the application the object which is to be protected by the patent must be particularly described. The invention must be so described by plans that, according to them, other experts may be able to make use of it. The necessary drawings, pictorial descriptions, models, and samples must be added.

The Patent Office issues regulations about other requisites of notification.

Until the notification is published, changes in the statements contained therein are admissible. Twenty mark for the costs of the proceedings have to be paid simultaneously with the notification.

§ 21. If the notification do not meet the prescribed demands, the Patent Office must require the patentee to remedy the defects which are pointed out to him within a given time. If this demand be not complied with within the required time, the notification is to be rejected.

§ 22. If the Patent Office consider the notification delivered in due form, and the grant of a patent not precluded, it then orders the notification to be published. From the time that the subject of the notification is published the patentee has the benefit, provisionally, of the legal effects of the patent (§§ 4 and 5).

If the Patent Office is of opinion that, according to §§ 1 and 2, the invention submitted to it cannot be patented, it rejects the notification.

§ 23. The publication of the notification is effected by once publishing the name of the patentee and the essential purport of the propositions contained in his notification in the "Imperial Gazette." Simultaneously with this the notification, with all its inclosures, must be publicly on view at the Patent Office. The publication must be accompanied by a notice that the object of notification is provisionally protected against any unauthorised use.

If there is a question of obtaining the grant of a patent for the army or navy in the name of the Government, the public exhibition of the notification and its inclosures is abstained from.

§ 24. The Patent Office has to decide upon the grant of the patent at the expiration of eight weeks from the day of publication. Up to that time the grant may be protested against at the Patent Office. The protest must be in writing, and must be furnished with reasons. It can only be founded upon the assertion that the invention is not new, or that the suppositions contained in § 3, Part II., are correct.

Before coming to a decision, the Patent Office can determine on the summons and hearing of those interested, and can order a report upon the proposition to be drawn up by suitable persons, competent to decide in one branch of technics, as well as other means necessary for the elucidation of the matter.

§ 25. The

§ 25. The patentee can protest against the decision which rejects the notification. The patentee and the protester can both protest against the resolution which decides upon the grant of the patent within the period of four weeks after the delivery of the documents on the subject. Twenty mark for costs have to be paid immediately on entering the protest. If the fee is not paid the protest is considered void.

§ 24. Part II. comes into force for the proceedings.

§ 26. When the grant of the patent has been finally decided upon, the Patent Office issues a notice about it in the "Imperial Gazette," and then draws up a deed for the patentee.

If the patent is refused, it has likewise to be made known. With the refusal the effects of the provisional protection are considered as not having existed.

§ 27. The opening of the action relative to the declaration of nullity, or on the withdrawal of the patent, only results upon application. In the case of § 10, No. 2, the aggrieved person only has a right to make the application. The application has to be made to the Patent Office in writing, and has to state the facts upon which it is founded.

§ 28. The opening of the suit being decreed, the Patent Office acquaints the patentee with the application, and requires him to explain himself upon the subject within four weeks.

If the patentee does not explain himself within that time, a decision may be given immediately after the application without any summons or hearing of the persons interested, and in the decision every fact maintained by the applicant may be considered as proved.

§ 29. If the patentee protest in time, or, if in case of § 28, sentence 2, an immediate decision has not been arrived at, the Patent Office takes the necessary steps for the elucidation of the subject in the former case, giving notice of the protest to the applicant. It can issue orders for the examination of witnesses and experts. The regulations for judicial proceedings in civil lawsuits have to be observed on their behalf. The proofs produced by witnesses have to be drawn up by a sworn recorder.

The judgment is given after the summons and hearing of those concerned. If the withdrawal of the patent according to § 11, No. 2, is applied for, the judgment upon this application must be preceded by the threat of a withdrawal of the patent, together with a statement of the reasons, and appointing a certain term.

On the verdict being given, the Patent Office is quite at liberty to decide as to how far the costs of the proceedings are to be borne by the persons concerned.

§ 30. The courts are bound to afford the Patent Office their legal aid. Punishments of defaulting witnesses and experts, or of those who withhold their evidence, or refuse to give it upon oath, as well as producing a defaultory witness, are settled by the courts on application made to them.

§ 31. Appeals are admissible against the decisions of the Patent Office. The appeal is made to the Imperial Higher Mercantile Court. It has to be made in writing, with reasons adduced within six weeks of its presentation at the Patent Office.

The costs of the suit are fixed, according to §§ 28 and 29, by a verdict of the court.

The further judicial proceedings are decided upon by an order which proceeds from the court, and which is then established by Imperial Decree, with consent of the Federal Council.

§ 32. The regulations with regard to judicial language contained in the law on the constitution of law-courts are applicable to the business terms to be used in the Patent Office. Applications not made in German are taken on notice of.

THAMES CONSERVANCY.

GENERAL REPORT of the CONSERVATORS of the RIVER THAMES, from the 1st January to the 31st December 1876, with ACCOUNTS of MONEYS RECEIVED and EXPENDED by them for the Year ending 31st December 1876.

---

GENERAL REPORT of the PROCEEDINGS of the CONSERVATORS of the RIVER THAMES from the 1st January 1876 to the 31st December 1876.

NEW moorings have been laid down at several places, and the moorings for shipping generally have been maintained in a very good condition, no casualties having arisen by means of any failure in them.

A new pier has been constructed at Chelsea, and the piers for landing and embarking passengers from steamboats have been kept in good working condition.

The excessive and exceptional floods of the latter part of 1875 and the early part of 1876 inflicted much damage on the works below Staines and above Teddington by the choking up of the channels, thus occasioning a considerable outlay for dredging.

The deepening of the channel between Teddington and Richmond has been steadily proceeded with.

In order to afford a ready and more economical mode of conveying away the material that will be raised by the dredgers from the shoals formed by the mud deposits in the river, the Conservators have caused two large steam hoppers to be built.

A careful survey of the state of the river near the great sewage outfalls at Barking and Crossness is made annually. The survey of 1876 shows that the deposit still continues, notwithstanding the great scouring effects of the floods in the winter 1875-6.

During the year, 26 vessels that were sunk by collision have been raised by the staff of the mooring service, the heavy lifting lighters with steam appliances having been found very effective for performing this duty.

The Explosives Act of 1875 having come into operation on 1st January 1876, the Conservators framed a set of bye-laws relating to explosives, and appointed 11 of their officers to be inspectors under that Act. Under the provisions of these bye-laws, the barges carrying explosives on the River Thames have been duly inspected and licensed, and through the exertions of the inspectors the explosive portions of the cargoes of many vessels have been either carefully stowed or else securely and properly re-stowed under the supervision of the inspectors. Several convictions have been obtained for infractions of the Explosives Act and bye-laws.

The small steam-vessels navigating the upper part of the river have increased of late, and complaints have reached the Conservators of the manner in which some of these vessels have been navigated. When sufficient evidence has been forthcoming, the Conservators have instituted proceedings against the persons thus infringing the bye-laws, which direct that vessels shall be navigated in a careful and proper manner, and at such speed as shall not endanger or cause damage to other vessels, or injury to the banks of the river.

The President of the Local Government Board presented a Return to Parliament 12th July 1876, No. 353, showing the results of the sewage notices served by the Conservators under the various Conservancy Acts. This Return prepared by the Conservators, showed that at Oxford, Abingdon, and Windsor, works for the diversion of sewage were in progress, and that at Reading such works were then nearly completed.

Notwithstanding delays caused by the recent floods, the Conservators hope that all the sewage above the in-takes of the Metropolitan Water Companies will soon be diverted from the river.

In the district below the in-takes of the water companies, and above the western limits of the Metropolis, the sewage of various places has not yet been diverted from the river, notwithstanding the legal measures taken by the Conservators.

Two Reports have been made to the Local Government Board by their Inspector, as to uniting the various authorities in this locality, so as to form one board for dealing with the sewage of the combined district. As the Bill for carrying out this mode of dealing with the sewage is now before Parliament, the Conservators hope that this sewage also will ere long cease to flow into the river.

With reference to the Upper Navigation, the Supplemental Report presented to Parliament by the Conservators on 19th February 1877, No. 48, leaves little to be added, especially as the Select Committee now sitting is being furnished with the most ample information as to the present condition of the upper district.

Besides the outlay on ordinary repairs and improvements, the Conservators have expended, during 1876, the sum of 5,033 l. on the reconstruction of part of the works on the Upper Navigation, and they trust that the present inquiry may eventually have the result of providing sufficient funds to enable the Conservators not only to restore the few locks and weirs still in a state of dilapidation, but likewise give them the means of making all practicable improvements in that part of the river.

27 June 1877.

F. W. E. Nicolson, Deputy Chairman.
E. Burstal, Secretary.

THAMES VALLEY.”

REPORT of the CONSERVATORS of the RIVER THAMES on the WORKS in the UPPER DISTRICT of the RIVER, and on the FLOODS in the THAMES

1. THE recent floods in the valley of the Thames having attracted public attention, and many erroneous statements having been made at public meetings and in the newspapers, the Conservators of the River Thames think it right to supplement their annual Reports made to Parliament by the following statement :—

2. In considering any question relating to the River Thames a distinction must be drawn between the Upper Navigation from Staines to Cricklade, about 40 miles above Oxford, and the Lower Navigation, extending from Staines to Yantlet Creek. The funds applicable to these two districts are in a very different condition, the lower fund having been found sufficient to keep the river in proper order, while that appertaining to the Upper District is quite inadequate to complete the reconstruction of the dilapidated locks and weirs, in addition to meeting the necessary current expenses.

3. At the instance of the Government the Act of 1866 was passed imposing on the Conservators the control of the Upper Navigation. Five members were added to the Conservancy Board as representatives of that district. One of these members is appointed by the Board of Trade; the other four are elected, one retiring annually by rotation.

4. The income of the district thus transferred was barely sufficient to pay current expenses, nothing being left for works; while the locks and weirs, with very few exceptions, were in the most deplorable condition, threatening a total stoppage of the navigation. Such was the critical state of Bell Weir Lock, the next above Staines, that the Committee of the House of Commons requested the Conservators to rebuild this lock while the Bill of 1866 was under consideration.

5. After causing an elaborate survey of the Upper District to be made, and having received reports from the late Mr. Beardmore, C.E., and Mr. Leach, engineer to the Conservators, the necessary works for maintaining the navigation and for facilitating the escape of flood waters were steadily carried out. The tabular statements annexed to this memorandum show the nature and cost of the works executed in the Upper District.

6. In 1869 Messrs. Beardmore and Leach prepared a scheme for improving the river and its branches between King's Weir and Sandford. Had this scheme been carried out it would have been equivalent to raising the whole surface of the land, subject to inundation in that district from two feet six inches to three feet above its present level, thus securing it against flooding. The great advantages offered by this scheme to Oxford and to the land in the neighbourhood, induced the Conservators to forward a copy of the engineer's report to the heads of the colleges at Oxford, to the Oxford Local Board of Health, and others; the answers received were favourable to the proposal, and suggested that rating powers should be obtained for carrying it into effect.

Unfortunately the riparian landowners strenuously opposed the rating clauses of the Bill introduced by the Conservators in 1870; these clauses had to be withdrawn, and consequently the low-lying lands above and near Oxford are still subject to periodical inundations.

8. In 1871 the Thames Valley Drainage Commissioners were constituted under an Act of Parliament for the purpose of draining lands near the Thames from Clifton Hampden upwards.

The Conservators believe that these Commissioners, who were furnished with considerable rating powers, have spent a large sum in surveys and other preliminary expenses, but as yet no works have been commenced, and the district remains liable to be flooded as before.

9. In contrast to this inaction on the part of the local body, the Conservators may fairly call attention to the annexed tabular statements, showing the great improvements made by them in the Upper Navigation District, notwithstanding the limited funds placed at their disposal by the Act of 1866.

10. Several necessary works are still unexecuted for which more money must be borrowed, but unfortunately the present state of the Upper Navigation finances forbids the hope that a sum sufficient to complete these works can be raised.

11. When the Upper District was placed under the control of the Conservators hopes were entertained and expressed in the preamble of the Act of 1866, that an increase of traffic would follow the improvement of the navigation. The Conservators regret to state that these anticipations have not been realized, the receipts from the barge traffic having steadily diminished since 1869. The receipts from the pleasure boats, though somewhat increased, have been injuriously affected by the inadequate tariff established by the Select Committee on the Bill of 1870, in opposition to the remonstrances of the Conservators.

12. The Conservators have been reproached with neglecting the district above Oxford, and with spending an undue proportion of their funds in the district between Oxford and Staines. This reproach is undeserved, for considerable improvements have been effected between Lechlade and Oxford. It was of course necessary to apply the chief part of the resources at the disposal of the Conservators to restoring those locks and weirs whose failure would have stopped the most important part of the river navigation.

13. Before entering upon the question of floods, a few facts with reference to the rainfall must be noted.

The area of the catchment basin of the Thames, westward of Kew, is about 3,944 square miles. In the first eight days of last December a continuous rainfall, measuring nearly two inches, saturated the ground; then followed after a week's dry weather a still heavier fall, which continued with little intermission, until the 19th January. The total rainfall in the seven weeks ending with this date was about 12 inches; the average annual rainfall in the Thames Valley being about 25 inches. It will thus be seen that half the annual average rainfall was poured into the Thames Valley in seven weeks.

14. Supposing a rainfall of only three inches over the 3,944 square miles to find its way into the river, there would be about 27,488,000,000 cubic feet of water to be carried off, or 491 times the amount of one day's summer discharge at Teddington Weir.

As

As three inches form but a small fraction of the rainfall in December and January, it is not surprising that an extraordinary flood should have occurred.

15. Only four very high floods in 1821, 1852, 1875, and early in 1877 are recorded as having occurred in the Thames Valley during the last 56 years.

Although the records of the earlier floods are imperfect, sufficient data exist to institute a comparison between them and the two recent floods.

COMPARISON of the GREAT FLOOD of 1821 with that of 1877.

Height of the 1821 flood above that of 1877 :—										Feet. in.
At Staines	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	1	1½

„ Moulsey - ditto	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	2	3
„ Teddington - ditto	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	4	0

16. The above figures prove that while the flood of 1821 was only 13, 12, 2½, and 3 inches above the flood of 1877 at the locks between Staines and Shepperton, it was 2 feet 3 inches and 4 feet above the recent flood at Sunbury, Moulsey, and Teddington, a result chiefly due to the effects of dredging, and likewise to improvements of the weirs near these latter locks. The records of the flood of 1852 are imperfect, but they show that it was about the same height as the flood of 1877.

17. The figures in the Table immediately above were noted at the locks before accurate and detailed observations on the rainfall in December 1876, and January 1877, had been received. It is now found, as was expected, that the rainfall was less in the upper part of the river, and very great on the watershed of the rivers Wey and Mole, causing the marked rise at the three lower locks.

18. In all ordinary floods the improvements made at various places, and the stringent regulations as to opening the tackle at the weirs, due regard being had to the legal rights of the millers and the requirements of the navigation, leave no just ground for complaint.

19. The capacity of the river being insufficient to carry off excessive floods caused by an enormous quantity of rain falling in a comparatively short time, the water must necessarily spread over the low-lying riparian districts.

Although two of these very high floods have succeeded each other in 48. 1875

1875 and 1876, it has already been stated that only four have occurred in 56 years.

20. The question therefore arises, are these unusual floods sufficiently frequent, and is the damage caused by them so great as to make it advisable for the riparian landowners and occupiers, on whom the charge must necessarily fall, to incur a very large outlay with a view to prevent the extension, or to mitigate the effects of such floods.

21. Various schemes for the prevention of extraordinary floods have been suggested, among them the construction of impounding reservoirs.

Let it be assumed that in order to receive only one inch of rainfall over the 3,944 square miles, forming the catchment basin of the Thames above Kew, six reservoirs were to be constructed along the course of the Thames westward of Teddington; if each reservoir were 15 feet deep, it must be  $3\frac{3}{4}$  square miles in extent. Even supposing the necessary land could be procured, the cost of this land, and the formation of the reservoirs, would amount to at least a quarter of a million sterling for each reservoir.

22. The alteration of the road-bridges, which are so obstructive to the flow of the water, the deepening of the river, lowering of the weirs, and construction of tumbling bays, on a greater scale than has hitherto been practicable, would assist the escape of flood waters; but these operations involve an expenditure beyond the means, and an interference with private rights beyond the legal powers, of the Conservators.

23. It is to be hoped that no amount of temporary inconvenience or damage will induce the Legislature hastily to authorise the construction of impounding reservoirs, or carrying out other schemes on a large scale which are certain to be extremely costly, and may not prove effectual remedies.

24. The riparian landowners and occupiers should carefully consider whether the execution of the extensive works suggested by various persons may not entail a far heavier burden than any damage caused by these temporary and rarely recurring floods.

25. If excessive floods are to be dealt with a searching preliminary inquiry should be instituted, for it is manifest that large powers and ample funds, only to be obtained by an Act of Parliament, must be provided if all the low-lying lands in the Thames Valley are to be secured against every possible inundation.

26. The improvement of the Upper District, which was transferred in 1866 to the Conservators in a deplorable condition, has been a source of constant and anxious consideration, and nothing but the want of adequate funds has prevented the work of restoration being more speedily and more completely executed.

In carrying out all new works, the escape of flood waters has been facilitated where practicable, and this important provision will be for the future, as it has been in the past, duly borne in mind.

27. The foregoing remarks refer chiefly to the upper districts of the river. It may be desirable to add a few remarks with respect to the tidal portion of the Thames. Careful observations are being made in reference to the level of the water. Until the land waters have run off, and until the river has returned to its normal condition, no very accurate or trustworthy comparison can be made with former surveys.

So far as the recent observations go they prove that the flooding of the low-lying districts of the metropolis is chiefly due to very high tides common to the Thames and to other ports and harbours on the coast, and not to the embankments or other local causes to which this flooding has been attributed.

28. In conclusion, the Conservators invite comparison between the present state of the river, whether above or below Staines, with its condition before their jurisdiction commenced, feeling confident that the more generally their proceedings are known the more will the public be convinced that the duties imposed on the Conservators have been efficiently performed.

Old Windsor.—Similar means were adopted, and the result has been to lower ordinary floods by about 18 inches.

Weirs Rebuilt.

Rushey.—The opening enlarged to allow a greater escape of flood water.

King's.—The opening enlarged to allow a greater escape of flood water.

Medley (two).—The weir on the principal stream could not be lengthened, but it was deepened 15 inches.

Day's.—A solid erection in the centre of the weir was removed and the space converted into a tumbling bay.

Marlow.—Additional openings are being made to facilitate the escape of floods.

Cookham (two). The weir on the principal stream had an obstruction removed in order to increase the waterway.

Boveney.—A portion of the adjoining bank having been washed away, the space was converted into a low tumbling bay, thereby gaining increased space for floods.

Romney.—A part of the adjoining bank having given way it was converted into a tumbling bay. The former tumbling bay near the lock was lengthened.

Weirs Repaired.

Osney.—A portion of the weir gave way. In renewing it, the waterway was enlarged.

Sandford.—The under-water work renewed, and a tumbling bay constructed.

Crowmarsh.—Much of the permanent work has been renewed.

Cleve.—A tumbling bay has been constructed, and other repairs effected.

Goring.—Similar repairs to those at Cleve have been effected.

Whitchurch.—By far the greater part of this weir has been rebuilt.

Shiplake.—A portion of this weir has been rebuilt.

Marsh.—As Shiplake.

Hambleden.—As Shiplake, but to a greater extent.

Hurley.—A part of this weir gave way, and has been renewed.

Temple.—A portion of this weir has been rebuilt.

Boulton.—A large portion of this weir gave way. It has been renewed, and other parts as well.

The shifting tackle of all these weirs have constantly to be repaired and renewed.

UPPER NAVIGATION.

STATEMENT OF BRIDGES BUILT.

The Sheepwash Bridge at Oxford.—Was a timber bridge, with three openings, and most inconvenient to pass on account of the abrupt turn in the channel under it. The new bridge is of iron, in one span of 60 feet.

The Grandpont Bridge.—Placards used to be placed on this bridge notifying that it was not safe. An iron bridge has been substituted.

Below Day's Lock.—A timber swing-bridge over the navigable waterway had an opening of about 18 feet. An iron bridge, in one span of 60 feet, has been substituted.

In Cookham Cut.—A similar swing-bridge has had an iron bridge in one span substituted for the wooden bridge, with very narrow openings.

In Old Windsor Cut.—A similar bridge to that in Cookham Cut has been built, with like improvements.

Numerous towing-path bridges, some of wood and some of iron, have been built.

Notes.—As no local information has been furnished to the Registrar General relating to the increase or decrease of population in each of the Registration Districts in Table 17, no reliable estimate of the population in each of the 26 years, 1847 to 1872, can be supplied. The population, therefore, returned throughout this Table is that enumerated at the Censuses of 1851, 1861, and 1871.

For the years 1847 to 1850 inclusive, the causes of death at the different ages were not abstracted for Superintendent Registrars' Districts in London.

The districts of Clerkenwell and St. Luke were incorporated with the district of Holborn in the year 1869. The facts for the district thus enlarged have been given for the previous years.

The districts of East and West London were incorporated with the district of London City in 1870. The facts for the previous years refer to the district as enlarged in 1870, except that, in 1858, Clifford's Inn and Serjeant's Inn were added to the then District of West London, and the facts for those places are not included for the years 1847 to 1857. The population in 1851 of these three districts as constituted in 1858 was 129,171.

Note.—For the years 1847 to 1850 inclusive, the causes of death at the different ages were not abstracted for Superintendent Registrars' Districts in London.

RETURN "of the Number of all UNCOMPARED DOCUMENTS in the REGISTRY of DEEDS OFFICE (IRELAND), from Establishment of the Office to present Date, under the Heads of: Transcripts of Memorials; Abstracts of Memorials, Original and Duplicate; Lands Index Volume, Original and Duplicate; Names Index, Original and Duplicate; and, Negative Search Record Book, Original and Duplicate."

TRANSCRIPTS of MEMORIALS.

FROM the commencement of the Registry (A.D. 1708) to the date of the above Order (10th May 1877), there have been One million, Fifteen thousand, Nine hundred and Eighty-three memorials registered. The transcripts of Four hundred and Twelve thousand, Nine hundred and Six of these memorials, or thereabouts, are uncomparred.*

Little practical inconvenience arises from the non-comparison of these documents, which are found by experience to be, on the whole, accurately transcribed, and free from material error. There is no direction in any of the statutes regulating the department that the transcripts of memorials should be compared. The original memorial itself is easily referred to in all cases where it is considered necessary or advisable to do so. Besides, the abstract books kept for the last 50 years, in conformity with the statutes made in that behalf, and carefully compared with the original memorials, contain the essential particulars of each memorial and its transcript in the tabular form following:—

FORM.

Year and Day of Registering, Volume of the Year, and Number of the Memorial.	Name of the Instrument.	Date of the Instrument.	Names of all the Grantors, and One or more of the Grantees.		Consideration, Rent, Renewal Fines, Term.	Name, Description, and Situation of the Premises.	General Nature of the Instrument, whether Trust, Marriage Settlement, Mortgage, or Absolute Conveyance.
			Grantor.	Grantee.

These abstracts, being an absolutely reliable condensation of the memorials, are the sources of information primarily and mainly consulted by the public and the official searchers.

Attested copies of Memorials are never issued from the office without having been accurately compared with the original memorials.

ABSTRACTS of MEMORIALS, Original and Duplicate.

THE Abstract Book was first instituted as an office book by the 9 Geo. 4, c. 57, s. 12 (15 July 1828), which Act was repealed by the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 87, s. 1. The latter Act, sec. 12, re-enacted that an Abstract Book should be thenceforth kept in original and duplicate. All the Abstract Books (original) from 15th August 1828 to the present time have been compared. The duplicates are compared up to 1857, but have never been required for use. The duplicate Abstract Book has not been compiled since the latter year, as stated in Messrs. Law and Chisholm's Report, nor has any inconvenience whatsoever been occasioned thereby.

The Act 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 87, further directed that retrospective Abstract Books should be constructed for the period 1708 to 1828, "as and when the funds of the office would permit." In reference to this direction, the Report of Messrs. Law and Chisholm states that: "From 1708 to 1717 there are 22 volumes of Abstracts of Memorials not compared, and no duplicates. No Abstract Books exist from 1718 to 1799. From 1800 to 1828, there are 710 volumes not compared, and no duplicates."

The compilation of the first set of Abstracts above mentioned (1708-1717) did not take place for more than a century after the period to which they refer, nor was the second series (1800-1828) compiled until long after the time to which it refers. These Abstracts, being uncomparred, are never used.

* "It cannot be stated with certainty whether the memorials were compared in earlier periods of the registry; but from the correct state in which the first 300 volumes of transcripts appear, it is presumed these were compared." (Parliamentary Paper 498 of 1861, and Messrs. Law and Chisholm's Report to the Treasury in 1865).

LANDS INDEX VOLUME, Original and Duplicate.

THE (original) Lands Index was compared on 10th May 1877 (date of the above Order), up to the 12th day of February 1877. This Index is now (11th day of July 1877) compared to 26th day of May 1877.

There are 89 volumes of the duplicate Lands Index uncomparred up to the end of 1869. They are in process of comparison.

The uncomparred books are never used.

NAMES INDEX, Original and Duplicate.

THERE are no uncomparred (original) Indexes of Names, the comparison of these volumes being completed to the latest moment. The duplicate sectional Index has been compared and checked up to part of the year 1858, as stated in Messrs. Law and Chisholm's Report, when, as these books were never used for searching purposes, their comparison was discontinued, and the clerical labour thus economised, was more usefully employed. There are 89 volumes of these duplicate sectional Indexes uncomparred. When the consolidated Indexes for any decennial period are completed, the sectional Indexes original as well as duplicate are no longer used.

No uncomparred Index, of any kind, is ever used.

A duplicate Index, on paper, in surname dictionary order, and compared to the latest period, has been carried on side by side with the current sectional Index of Names from 1870 to the present date, and is in official use.

NEGATIVE SEARCH RECORD BOOK, Original and Duplicate.

THE Act 11 & 12 Vict. c. 120, does not authorise the keeping of a duplicate Negative Search Record Book. Such a book was kept for some time but abandoned in the year 1857, as being found wholly useless and unnecessary. The Negative Search Record Book is compared against every completed negative search before the same is delivered from the office, which is a comparison of this book to the current moment.

RETURN of the Date of establishing "ERROR BOOK," and Number of Errors discovered in duly compared and certified Documents, and which Errors are recorded in such Error Books.

THERE is no record of the establishment of this book, which is not directed to be kept by any statute regulating the Department. The first entry would appear to have been made in the year 1853. It is merely a private memorandum and query book, and ensures the due consideration of each entry appearing on it, as well as that none but necessary corrections shall be made, and by an experienced clerk, specially nominated for this duty. There would appear to be 5,200 errors, or thereabouts, discovered in duly compared and certified documents, and corrected from time to time. They extend over the entire period of the Registry from its commencement in 1708 to the present, almost 170 years. Many are of the most trivial nature, many simply clerical errors, and no loss or prejudice to any person has ever arisen in respect of any of them. They bear a very insignificant proportion to the mass of entries amongst which they are found, these entries numbering millions.

The elimination of these errors, as they are discovered in conducting the different processes of business from time to time, is the result of the elaborate care bestowed upon the correctness of the various books.

RETURN of the Number of Persons engaged, Length of Time occupied, and Cost in Money of compiling DICTIONARY INDEX from Daily or Sectional Index in Years following: 1840 to 1849, 1850 to 1859, 1860 to 1869.

THIS portion of the Return can only be estimated approximately, as the compilation of these Indexes did not form the subject of any special head of account. They were arranged, compiled, and compared from time to time, according as the current business of the office admitted of a greater or less number of clerks being employed at this particular duty. A sum of 2,500*l.* for each decennial period as above may be placed against this service. The Consolidated Surname Index at present carried on occupies about one-third of the time of four clerks, and costs about 250*l.* per annum.

RETURN of the Average Gain of Time in making SEARCHES on DICTIONARY INDEX over DAILY INDEX.

IN all cases the gain is considerably in favour of the Dictionary Index, as stated in Messrs. Law and Chisholm's Report to the Treasury in 1865. In some cases the gain of time is as five minutes to an hour.

RETURN of the Date at which the DAILY INDEX for 1871 was put in Dictionary Order on Parchment.

THE Act 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 87, does not authorise the consolidation of the Daily (Sectional) Index in dictionary order on parchment, until the expiration of the decennial period to which that Index refers. A Consolidated Surname Index of Names on paper has, however, been prepared under the direction of the present Registrar, with the knowledge of the Treasury, in lieu of the Duplicate Sectional Index, and is in use amongst the official searchers with most satisfactory results. This Index might with advantage be written on parchment for public use, for the quinquennial period 1870-74, should the Treasury give the necessary authority to the Registrar.

RETURN of the Dates up to which the NAMES INDEX, and LANDS INDEX were compared on the 1st day of January 1873, 1874, 1875, 1876, and 1877 respectively; also from the 1st day of January to the 28th day of February 1877 (inclusive).

NOTES by CHIEF CONSTABLE.

Number of cases, under "The Dogs Act, 1871," in which the dogs were ordered to be destroyed	-	-	-	-	-	-	3
Number of cases, under "The Dogs Act, 1871," in which dogs ordered to be kept under control	-	-	-	-	-	-	2
Number of cases in which owners voluntarily destroyed dogs to escape proceedings under Dogs Act, 1871	-	-	-	-	-	-	17

Prior to January 1875, there was no record of sheep-worrying kept by the police in this county, because the destruction of sheep by dogs was, until then, held to be a matter for remedy by a civil action. On the 25th of that month a case under "The Dogs Act, 1871," was debated, on appeal, in the Court of Session, when Lord Curriehill decided that the provisions of that statute applied to dogs which were dangerous to animal life, and not only to dogs which were dangerous to human beings; thereafter the provisions of that statute were enforced in this county, and a record kept of all cases investigated by the police.

The dates left blank in the Returns, and marked thus ×, cannot be obtained, as the cases were not at the time reported to the police, and the farmers cannot now give the dates.
